Square THE BUSINESS SITUATION.

The business outlook, says the Boston Post, is certainly much more encouraging than it has been for some time past. The majority of the leading trade centres note But wis marked improvement in the condition of general trade. The dry goods trade shows early signs of a good spring mevement. The iron trade is reported as looking betthan for some time past, and in New York the demand for pig has gained materially. Wabes Money continues in abundant supply at the leading cities both east and west and . the banks are in excellent condition. Manbes quager Chase of the St. Louis clearing house about sends an aggregate statement of the 18 and six national banks in that city on 21 28 Dec. 31, 1883, compared with the statement fel gar of December, 1882, from which it appears sasoon that the assets have gained from $55,854,-825 to $6 ,424,344, an increase of $4,569 -519. Both time and current deposits show heavy gains. The St. Louis statement is a sample of the banks of the west. It is true the manufacturing interests are still under a cleud, but the great shrinkage in prices from which they have suffered would seem to have gone far enough to satisfy all requirements, and should create an increased demand for their products. There were 321 failures in the United States reported to Bradstreet's during the week, 24 less than in the preceding week, 4 more than 8 feet in length, placed upon suitable matter into consideration and make up chard, a block house and log barn, a good well of the corresponding week in 1883, and 111 stringers, with a suitable side track of our minds what we are going to do if we water and a root house. The result will be received by the thinking masses of the country with great joy. The representatives of the people in both branches of congress will now have no difficulty in finding their way out of the financial embarrassment with which they have been lately beset. No Sherman bills er McPherson bills ar now required to keep the government in debt in order that banks may thrive The four millions of bends in the treasury as security for bank note circulation can now sixteen millions annually in interest.

The question is settled, and greenbacks all debts, public and private. Persons suffering from Rupture should send their address,

"One morning, just after a tramp lett my house," said a suburban resident to a reporter, "I noticed that he took a piece of chalk out of his pocket and made a horizontal mark on the fence and continued his tramp. Somewhat mystified, I did not erase the mark and kept it on the fence for future observation, and sure enough in a few days another member of the genus tramp came marching along the roadway, stopped at the gate, but before entering he seemed to hesitate, looked about the fence and noticing the horizontal mark entered without further hesitation

"Intent upon watching the meaning of the marks, I treated the fellow just as I did my predecessor, and gave him a cup of coffee. Before he left he added his horizontal line to that of his friend's and went on his way rejoicing. More curious than ever, I must confess that I awaited the arrival of the next tramp with great anxiety. When he came, as ragged and dilapidated as the others before him, he also looked for the marks on the fence and entered. I gave him a cold piece of meat. He, like the others, took chalk out of his pocket, but in place of making a horizontal line he drew a perpendicular line across the fence and departed.

"After that," continued the speaker, I made up my mind to make this matter a study, and through a period ex-tending for over two years I learned all the marks and signs of the tramping fraternity. One fellow I gave a square meal, and he drew a square on the fence, but immediately after that I was besieged with tramps until I erased the square, and then they were not quite as numerous. Then, determined to get at the bottom of the thing, I drove the next applicant for a square meal out of the yard and treated him in the worst manner imaginable; that fellow placed a cross on the fence, and for a month or so every tramp who happened to pass my house took a look at the fence and my house took a look at the lence and made no attempt to enter the gate.

Just for a matter of experiment and to convince myself that I was right concerning these marks, I erased the cross, replaced it with a square, but you can depend on it that I didn't keep it there long, for I discovered to my cost that every tramp in the neighbor-hood was knocking at my door for ad-mission. I could go on and give you a long string of these mysterious marks, I think I have told you enough to convince you that there is such a thing in existance as a tramps' protective association; but let me tell you something else and then I'll quit. I own a very vicious looking dog; I generally keep him chained up. One day I lared on a tramp with a square on the fence. I watched him from the window, noticed the pleased expression of his counte-nance when he beheld the mark, and I immediately unchained the dog. He opened the gate, the dog barked sav-agely, made a jump at him, and all my friend could do was to get on the other side of the fence before the dog abre-visted his clothing."

viated his clothing.' "What sign did he leave on the fence?"

"He was so seared and surprised that I didn't think he would leave any sign, but after he was a short distance up the roadway I went out and noticed that he left a circular mark behind him. Sc my friend," concluded the man from the country, "just tell your country friends if they don't want to be pestered to death with the tramps, have them ge: a piece of chalk and mark up their fence with crosses and circles."-Cleveland Herald.

It Was Past Telling.

There was a suit before a Justice of the Peace the other day, in which a citizen of the suburbs attempted to make out that he had been swindled in a horse trade. The defendant had warranted the horse "reasonably sound for a beast of his age," and the age was given at eighteen years.

"Did you give the animal's age at eighteen?" was asked of the defendant.

"I gave it as about eighteen."

"What did you mean by reasonably sound for his age?" "I meant that he had one leg on which there were no ringbones or spav-ins, and he could see pretty well out of one eye.' "How old do you believe the horse to

"Not over nineteen, but I'll leave that to his Honor and the jury." It was agreed to adjourn to the alley and inspect the beast. They found the horse leaning up against the wall, head down and eyes full of tears, and his Honor put the age down at twenty-four. Each of the jurymen had a look at the horse's teeth and eyes and feet, and they were firm in their figures, which ranged from twelve to forty-five years of age. When the counsel for the plaintiff discovered this he said:

"Your Honor, I desire to withdraw from record everything relating to the

from record everything relating to the horse's age."

"Because, when a man like your Honor can't tell whether a horse is fifteen or a hundred years old, and a jury of intelligent citizens can't distinguish a ringbone from a spavin, the defendant can't be blamed for throwing in a sore back and poll-evil free gratis!"

"Very well, sir." "And we rest our case solely upon the fact that we were drunk when we made the trade, and that the defendant knew it and took advantage of us." The jury found for the defendant, of course. - Detroit Free Press,

-"A pretty little story is told," says a Newport correspondent, "of the Earl and Countess of Rosebery, who were here a short time since. A day or two before their wedding took place Miss Rothschild asked the young Earl what he would like for a wedding present from her. O, he replied, suppose you give me a box of gloves. The box of gloves was sent enclosed in an elegant inlaid case. On opening the box the Earl discovered an envelope addressed to him in a well-known hand. He expected it contained a dainty little note. It did, but not the sort of note he imagined. The contents of the envelope makes larger allowances for other people, in the estimate of their veracity, than the scientific inquirer. Knowing himself, by painful experience, how extremely difficult a matter it is to make perfectly sure you have observed anything on earth quite correctly, and have eliminated all possible chances of error, he acquires the fixed habit of doubting about one-half of what his fellow-creatures tell him in ordinary conversation, without for a single moment venturing to suspect them of deliberate untruthfulness. Children and servants, if they find anything they have been told is erroneous, immediately jump at the conclusion that the person who told them meant deliberately to deceive them; in their own simple and categorical fashion they answer plumply: "That's a lie." But the man of science is only too well acquainted in his own person with the exceeding difficulty of ever Mackinac Ex getting at the exact truth. He has spent hours of toil, himself, in watching and observing the behavior of some N. Y. Express 8 25 a m plant, or animal, or gas, or metal; and after repeated experiments, carefully designed to exclude all possibility of mistake, so far as he can foresee it, he at last believes he has really settled some moot point, and triumphantly publishes his final conclusions in a scientific journal. Ten to one, the very next number of that same journal contains a dozen supercilious letters from a dozen learned and high-salaried professors, each pointing out a dozen distinct and separate precautions which the painstaking observer neglected to take, and any one of which would be quite sufficient to vitiate the whole body of his observations. There might have been germs in the tube in which he boiled the water (germs are very fashionable just at present), or some of the germs might have survived and rather enjoyed the boiling; or they might have adhered to the under surface of the cork; or the mixture might have been tampered with during the experimenter's temporary absence by his son, aged ten years (scientific observers have no right, apparently, to have sons of ten years old, except perhaps for purposes of psychological re-search); and so forth, ad infinitum. And the worst of it all is that the unhappy experimenter is bound himself to admit that every one of the objections is perfectly valid, and that he very likely never really saw what with perfect confidence he thought and said he had seen. - Cornhill Magazine.
