Friday afternoon the dipper of dredge No. 7, of Carkin, Stickney & Cram's at work a short distance below the F. & P. M raidroad bridge on the east side of the river, at East Saginaw, brought to the surface of the water the body of a man that had evidently been in the water from appearances many months. The remains were these of a man about 40 years of age, with only a coat, or shirt, and a pair of shoes on them. The dredge was engaged in removing a lot of slabs from the bottom of the river, and the body was brought to the surface with the slabs, but was not touched by the dipper, and so must have been held down by the slabs. The officials wera notified, and the coroner being out of town Justice Forrest was authorized to impannel a jury and hold an inquest. The inquest was held at 7:30 p. m. Friday, and after listening to the evidence of the persons who found the body the jury returned a verdict in accordance with the above facts. The body was in an advanced stage of decomposition and it was interred as soon as possible. THE TARIFF A PARTY ISSUE. The tariff is a political question, because it involves a governmental policy that must be applied by legislation; it is a party question because it has been made so by the action of party convictions. It is true that some democrats are protectionists and some republicans believe in free trade or a tariff for revenue only. But there is a clearly culty. defined issue on the tariff question between theirepublican and democratic parties, and 11,18 of national importance because an entire change of policy is dependent upon the result of the election. The leading question discussed in the last session of congress was the tariff and in spite of all efforts to keep it in the back ground and give prominence to administrative reform, the economic question will assert its superiority. That is because it concerns the welfare and happiness of the masses. "Administrative reform" is recognized for just what it is, a question of the relative higher purity of the men composing the two parties, and the masses determine the absurdity of the proposition that democrats will be more honest in office than republicans by contrasting democrat and republican officials who come within the sphere of their acquaintance. The superiority is not to be seen. Se-called "administrative reform" involving only the question of who shall have the offices, democrats or republicans, cannot be made an issue that will arouse any interest in the mind of the fected by it and that there is no warrant ter the affairs of the government more honestly or capably than republicans. It appears to everybody that as a body of men the latter are the equals if not the superiors of the former in honesty and administrative ability.

But the tariff question involves the industries of the country in a way that compel; the interest of all classes of citizens. The policy of the country regarding the tariff for twenty years has been to so adjust duties as to encourage the establish ment of manufacturing enterprises in the United States, that the natural resources of the country may be developed and employment furnished for the greatest amount of labor at the best possible remuneration. Now tariff revision is proposed by both parties. The tariff is not affording too much protection, but is affording too much revenue. The republican party in their Chicago convention pledged itself to a revision that would reduce the retic convention also pledged the revision of the tariff, but on a different principle. That party proposes revision on the principle of precise language, "for government purposes exclusively." If anything the language more closely holds the tariff down to a purely revenue basis. "Exclusively for government purposes" means excluding all other purposes and objects. The very promises of the democratic platform that the change should be made so as not to distress labor or capital in the present, is corroborative of this view, that the democratic revision is intended to eliminate the principle of protection and establish the nearest approach to free trade that is possible under our revenue system. It is these announced purposes of the two parties respecting their dealing with the tariff question, which are different and antagonistic, which constitutes the tariff not only a party issue, but the party issue of the presidential campaign of 1884. Involving the welfare of the people, it becomes the most important issue between the two parties; because the democrats are not possessed of superior administrative ability and it is presumptuous for them to assume that they are more honest or faithful in the discharge of official duties. - Bay City Tribune.

Troublesome Insects at the South

Many insects may be found in the South which do not exist in Northern States. In Texas the chiqua, or red bug, may be found in large numbers. The centipede is generally found to be from eight to fourteen inches in legged worm of the North, except that City, Mich. it is flat, and its legs are tipped with black; the remainder of its body is yeldesiring to test the insect's poisoning power purchased a duck, and allowed a centipede to crawl over its foot; the foot immediately began to swell, and in two hours the duck was dead.

There is a wasp in Texas which attaches little mud-cells to the interior of cells and then fills them with spiders, which it paralyzes by stinging, and then closes the cells. The eggs the imprisoned spiders until grown.
The spiders live for a long time with the power of movement destroyed by the wasp's sting.

The stinging lizard is a reptile which resembles the scorpion in shape, but is smaller, and of a yellow color. Its sting is more severe than that of the wasp.

The woodtick, as its name implies, is found in woods and brush. I have seen cattle and horses covered with them as thickly as the sole of a navvy's shoe is with hob-nails. They are not poisonous, but burrow into the skin so deeply as to make their removal a matter of diffi-

On a wet year cattle lose heavily or account of the ravages of the screwworm. The screw-worm fly is twice the size of the ordinary house-fly, and blue in color. It deposits its eggs while or the wing on a spot of blood, or a scratch or wound of any kind which it finds on a live animal. The eggs soon change to screw-worms, thousands of which burrow into the flesh, causing terrible suffering and death.

Mosquitoes are troublesome in the southern part of Texas. A man who has lived in Texas fifty years informed the writer that he saw a man on horseback, and he could not tell the color of the horse or of the man's coat, so thickly were they covered with mosquitoes.

The red ant of Texas is capable of stinging as badly as a wasp. It raises its hill two feet in height. It is in the form of a cone, and the entrance is at the apex. Roads radiate from an ant-hill in every direction, which are well traveled by their builders. The outgoing ants have no load, but those coming back may be always seen to have a burden, which is added to the stores underground. After a heavy rain the ants bring the store of seeds to masses. They know they will not be af- the surface and spread them on the ground to dry. When dry they are for believing that democrats will adminis- stored again. In the spring the ants may be seen busily planting their su-perfluous seeds. This they accomplish by placing the seeds on the ground and covering them with particles of earth. Like good farmers, the ants are careful to collect their crop when ripe.—Jay Eph, in Husbandman.

Dr. F. H. Terrill, Past Assistant Surgeon of the United States steamer Monocacy, which, with the Ticonderoga, is now-cruising in Chinese waters, has procured an interesting specimen of a root which is much esteemed by the Chinese. It is of the species of panax and belongs to the natural order of araliaca, and is commonly known as ginseng. The specimen in question was procured from Corea and is worth in China about $200. Not quite as large as a man's thumb, it is yellowish in color and has a dried and wrinkled apchinese idol, with the feet curled up under the body. The root was shown to the Pharmaceutical Society at its fast meeting, when quite a number of interesting remarks were made on the subject of ginseng by Prof. A. L. Leng-feld. The study of the root, apart from its traditionary aspect, has little in it of interest, but when the great value set upon its medicinal properties in China is considered, one finds one's self-attracted by the plant and its character-istics, so dissimilar are they from those of most other botanical species.

Botanically, then, ginseng has a perennial root which sends up annually a ATTORN smooth round stem, about a foot high and at the summit by three stalks, each of which supports a compound leaf, consisting of five leaflets. It has small R. J. SMITH, D., greenish flowers and bright red berries at certain seasons of the year. Although widely grown in China, both in a cultivated and wild state, it is not wholly confined to that region, being indigenous to the hilly regions of our Northern and Western States. A cer- G. S. DARLING, M. D., tain species (Panax Californium) is native to the soil of this State. It is yet unsettled whether the American ginseng is identical with the Chinese product, but it possesses the external appearance, if not the medicinal attributes, of the latter variety.

though varying in length from two to four inches, often being forked. Sometimes several irregular cylindrical or bulbous roots are found joined together by wire-like fibres. Its imagined re- H. B. SPILEMAN, semblance to the body of a man when found two forked was probably what caused the supernatural power of healing to be attributed to it. This shape is also an indication that-the root can lands, etc. Office, opposite Darling's Drug store, said county is held.

Such roots vary in price from $25 to $400, and are only possessed by the wealthy class-mandarins and others. Ginseng from Manchuria for losco County, and was once esteemed above all other kinds, and, in consequence of the immense exportations, if became so scarce that an imperial edict was issued prohibiting its collection there. Prof. Lockhart, of London, is authority for the statement that ginseng is imperial property in China, and that it is sold to those having the privilege of dealing in it at its weight in gold. Panax quinquefolium is the pharmacopæia' name for the American ginseng. In some of the lake States in 1860 the gathering of ginseng for the Chinese market developed into a positive mania, people leaving their homes and camping for weeks in the hills of Michigan. Wisconsin and Minnesota in search of the roots, the supply of which ran so short that it is now rarely found in sufficient quantities for exportation. The first cargo shipped from America to Canton yielded enermous profits. Russians on the Chinese border took to the cultivation of ginseng a few years ago, but the cultivated variety, which requires six years to attain perfection, is not valued so highly in China as the wild roots, requiring about thirty years in which to grow to a marketable size. Even in Japan, noted for the rapid and gigantic growth of its vegetation, the ginseng root does not thrive much faster than in other climates, and Japanese ginseng, being coarse-grained and not so sweet in taste as the Chinese variety, is considered to be of an Inferior quality.—San Francisco Chron-

One of California's Nabobs.

A man with a leg that hung as loose from his hip as if it had been a piece of hay rope buttoned a ragged old over-coat over his humped shoulders and pigeon breast. Then he looked up and down Main street with earnest vacuity, and hopped on his good leg to his wagon and drew himself painfully up to his seat. The top of the wagon was made chiefly of gunny sacks, and canted to one side as if it had about made up its mind to give up further effort to be a wagon-top. Three spokes were gone from the hind wheels. The hind spring was broken and was tied to the axle with half-unraveled ropes. Attached to this ruin of a vehicle was a mule. The wagon by comparison with this beast was a new and gaudy thing. The mule was tied to the broken and spliced shafts with odds and ends of straps. His whole harness was a maze of knots and twists and tangles. The mule stood with his nose within six inches of the ground, and gave a hollow cough at intervals. From a strap close to his ear a long tassel depended. It had once been red, but was now a dirty pink.

"Get up," said the man with the boneless leg, tugging at the rope and leather lines. The mule groaned deeply, and painfully started up at a walk so slow that it would have angered the chief mourners at a funeral. As ne walked it was noticed that one of his hind legs had been broken at the kneejoint, and healed so that it bent inward and rubbed against the other at every step. "Who is he?" "Oh, it's old Gripp that lives out on the sands," answered a farmer. "He must have a wretched life of it." "There you're off, young feller. Gripp is one of our oldest and best citizens-one of the pioneers. I reckon he's worth half a million."-Stockton Mail.

A Bad Indictment.

A highly-respected citizen was arraigned before court for shooting and killing a friend. The evidence was direct, and after exhaustive arguments had been made the Judge said:

"It is clearly proved that you are guilty as charged by the indictment." "But I protest my innocence," re-plied the prisoner. "The indictment reads that I did shoot and kill the gentleman with powder and a leaden bullet. This is a mistake. I had no bullets at the time, so I leaded my gun with powder and a horse-shoe nail." "That, indeed, alters the case," said the Judge. "The indictment said bul.

-Dr. George Fordyce, the anatomist this name, however, isn't so big as its appetite. Woolen fabrics are its favorite food, and its hunger is phenomenal. Scientific men do not believe that it will eat cotton or linen fabries when there is anything woolen handy, and it has never been charged with injuring silk. Feathers frequently furnish it with a dinner. It is happiest when in its own peaceful home beneath your parlor carpet. It eats and eats the livelong day, and you can't convince any house-keeper who ever waged war against it with benzine, kerosene, Dalmatian powder and tarred paper that it ever sleeps or does anything but eat at night. It goes so quietly about its work that you haven't the faintest idea it is boarding with you till you lift up you carpet some day and find nothing but bare threads on the under side. Unless you are sophisticated you wonder what in the mischief ever did that, for you don't see anything of the carpet-bug. The pesky pest is secretive and secluite food, and its hunger is phenomenal. don't see anything of the carpet-bug. The pesky pest is secretive and seclu-sive in its nature, and when it sees an outsider coming, it skips. As a skipper, too, it is renowned. The agile climex lectularius—which by any other name wouldn't smell any sweeter when you crush it—or the lively flea are nowhere in comparison with the carpet bug. Their boats are sawed or some one has hit them with a sandbag and they can't row. The anthrenus scrophulariæ is the Hanlan, the Jay-Eye-See, the Maud S. of bugocracy.

I once managed to catch a dozen of the little pests and corked them up in a bottle under a microscope with a lot of carpet-shreds. They thrived and grew fat in captivity, and the way the carpet-shreds disappeared was a caution. Seen through the microscope their resemblance, as far as hairiness and broadfront go, to a buffalo plainly shows where they got one of their names. Their backs seem to be composed of ridges running across the body, and thickly set with coarse, stiff hairs. Their color is black or a very dark brown, and their legs are legion. A more destructive snout than that with which they are adorned could hardly be imagined. "They live to eat," and they are admirably adapted

The carpet-bug increases with marvelous rapidity. It does not trouble its head—that is to say, its snout—with Malthusian or anti-Malthusian doctrines.
