The attack of the Au Sable Monitor on the standing of Charles R. Henry, a republican candidate for state senator, is wholly unwarranted. Mr. Henry stands well with the people, and will be elected by as large a majority as any man running for any office within this senatorial district, outside of the county tickets, as the Lakeside Monitor man shall see.—Harrisville Review.

It is said that although S. O. Fisher has not yet knocked in the head of his "bar," he is gaining in favor and popularity throughout the district every day.—Vassar Times. Queer, that in the same number with the foregoing allusion to Fisher's "bar!" the Times, should have made a sneaking attack on C. F. Gibson. Looks as though the head of the bar had been knocked in.—Bay City Tribune.

"An honest Republican" writing to the Gazette refers to that paper as "the only straight out Republican journal published in the county" and yet in the very same issue the Gazette throws the Republican nominee for Congress, C. F. Gibson, over board and hoists the name of Prof. A. M. Webster for the only reason, as stated by that paper, that "we have no personal acquaintance with Charles F. Gibson." The Gazette insinuates that Mr. Gibson has blots on his personal character. A leading prohibitionist of Bay City informed us yesterday that as a man and neighbor he knew of no better man than Mr. Gibson. He said nothing about any blots on Mr. Gibson's character. As to the many elite of the Republican party in this county requesting him to support Mr. Webster in preference to the Republican nominee, we are inclined to think Mr. Jackson is slightly mistaken. In the first place the Prohibitionists only claim 55 votes for their candidate in this county (probably about one third of this number will materialize in the ballot box). There are about 700 Republican votes in the county. Accordingly 645 Republicans of this county are not the elite of the party.

This is on the supposition that the prohibition vote will be taken from the Republican ranks. The Gazette says, "we believe a large portion of the Republicans of this county will follow in our tracks in the support of Prof. Webster." We have no doubt that the Gazette has already learned how sadly it got left in its predictions. Its unwarranted blot from the Republican nominee has called forth the utmost indignation on the part of the 645 Republicans whom that paper does not consider as the elite of the Republican party.

Prohibition Convention for Iosco County will be held in Robinson's hall, East Tawas, on Saturday, Oct. 11, '84 at 2 o'clock. All friends of prohibition in the County are earnestly requested to be present. All voters who desire clean tickets and who see the need of a new organization whose prime object is the suppression of the dram shop crime, are requested to send delegates.

"Shall our children be educated in the school house and the church or the brewery and the saloon." By order of the committee, A. M. Webster, Nelson Sims, R. M. Pelton.

To the Electors of Iosco County. Take notice that at a special meeting of Supervisors for Iosco county held at the court house on the 13th day of June 1884 "Resolved that the sum of two thousand five hundred dollars—$2,500—be raised by tax upon the taxable property of Iosco county for the purpose of building County Offices and fire proof vaults, and that such question be submitted to the electors of Iosco county at the next general election to be held in November next."

That under said resolution such matter will be submitted to the electors of Iosco county at the next general election to be held on the 4th day of November 1884 pursuant to the statute in such cases made and provided. The form of ballots will be as follows: Those in favor of it "For the Tax" and those not for it "Against the Tax." Date: Sept. 1, '84. E. E. WILLIAMS, County Clerk.

It ought to be plain enough to those who favor gradual reduction in protective duties that the process will bear with peculiar hardship on the smaller and weaker manufacturing industries. A twenty per cent reduction may not break a strong and rich corporation—indeed, would probably be

The undersigned W. F.

Judge Tuttle Speaks for Himself.

We clip the following from the Saturday Night.

EAST TAWAS, Oct. 1st, 1884.

Editor SATURDAY NIGHT:

I observe that it has been asserted that I have criticised the action of Mr. C. R. Henry in accepting additional compensation from the board of Supervisors for his services in the Schultz cases. Such a report is inaccurate. I think I may have stated that in receiving it he did what ninety-nine out of every one hundred men would have done under like circumstances. That his splendid services in the murder cases merited recognition by the board, no man doubts. He devoted whole weeks of his time to those cases. At the commencement of his term, when the board fixed his salary, they had no idea of the vast amount of work he would be called upon to attend to for the county. No man ever held the office of Prosecuting Attorney anywhere who made a better record. Every law-abiding citizen in Inosco county is proud of him, and I deeply regret that we cannot have his services in that office for all time to come. He began, and has continued his practice under me, and I know him as a lawyer and a public officer better than does any other man. I sum up his record in the four words following—honest, industrious, faithful, capable.

These qualities fit him most admirably for the office of State Senator, and if elected, as I know he will be, he will prove himself to be one of the brightest and most useful members of that body.

J. B. TUTTLE.

In the above communication Judge Tuttle pays a splendid tribute to Mr. Henry. No man has had a better opportunity of judging of Mr. Henry's integrity and efficiency as prosecuting attorney of this county than has Judge Tuttle. As the lawyer is closing his fourth year as prosecuting attorney under the Judge, the latter says, "I deeply regret that we cannot have his services in that office for all time to come." After Mr. Henry has practiced under him for five or six years, the Judge says, "honest, industrious, faithful, capable." Could he have said more?

Japanese Tea Houses.

A tea house of Japan is but one story high, with a nicely matted porch, from the corners of which depend the omnipresent Japanese paper lanterns. We catch a glimpse of the interior, and are amazed at the simplicity of the appointments, although this is one of the better class of inns. The floor within is covered with the universal Japanese mats, always three feet by six in dimensions, and, therefore, used as a matter of convenience for household measurement purposes. I have also learned that the fans in use in this country, with a view to the same utility, are usually made just one foot in length. These mats are scrupulously clean, and it seems entirely appropriate that we remove our shoes, in obedience to the prevalent custom, before entering. The only remaining articles of furniture are some scrolls which hang on the walls, and the common sliding screens, which are used for converting the interior of a Japanese house into just as many and such shaped apartments as the owner pleases. This is a respect in which Japanese convenience goes beyond American convenience, though I am not all in doubt as to which way I prefer.

A party of European tourists are laboriously "squatting" about some little tables, one for each guest, and sipping tea from tiny decorated cups. On the tables are also very small dishes of confectionery and sweetmeats. For waiters we observe modest, ever-smiling, clean-looking Japanese maidens, who are profuse in their demonstrations of civility. Indeed, we are tempted to call it palavering before we become accustomed to the ways of the people. The premises about the tea-house are converted into a pretty garden with rockeries and cascades, thus giving us this city, has four wives, and if he has good luck he will have another before long. During the last few weeks he has had a courtship on hand which has given him great trouble. He employed a girl named Mary White as a servant in one of his families. Mary was a fresh, plump, rosy-cheeked young Mormon. Her father was a saint with two wives. Mary was the daughter of wife No. 1. Wife No. 2 was gay and giddy, and when Dr. Sharp carried Mary back and forth between her father's home and the place of her service, he saw her and bewitched her, as White said. After a while Sharp enticed wife No. 2 away from her husband, and then White got an idea that the Doctor had bewitched him also. Another saint came along who was in the soothsaying business, and he told White that he had something that was good for him, but that it would cost money. The price was agreed upon. White bought the charm, worked it, and the evil spirit of Sharp was exorcised. Just as White was beginning to feel at ease once more, Sharp drove up with Mary and asked permission to make her Mrs. Sharp No. 5. To this the old people objected, for they believed he was possessed of a devil, and they thought he did not support his other wives any too well. When they gave Sharp the reasons for their refusal he was furious, and he took an oath in their presence that he would have Mary.

In the course of time he convinced the old man that it had been ordained from all time that Mary should become his wife; but the old lady said that the doctor had hoodooed her husband once more, and she refused to assent to the union. Then Sharp had a vision or two which he related to Mrs. White. She was still inexorable. Two or three days later he had a revelation that it would be very acceptable to the Lord to have Mary become his wife. It had no effect on her mother. Then Sharp dreamed dreams of mighty import every night, heard tremendous rumblings in the skies, saw a great light, and read many commands written on the fleeting clouds, all to the effect that Mary was his and his only. The old lady's teeth were set tight.

Taking a new tack, the doctor then threatened to summon Mrs. White before the High Council. She told him the Sanhedrim of the saints had no terrors for her. Then he appealed to the Bishop of that ward, and finding him dull of comprehension, he went before the Council with his grievance. Here he found sympathetic listeners. The old Bishop was promptly removed and a new one who believes in marrying off the young women, was appointed. Sharp is on good terms with the new ecclesiastic, and considers himself as good as married already. Mary is now at school at Provo, and Sharp has gone after her. The new Bishop is wrestling with her mother, who now sees the futility of further resistance, and who will in a few days, it is understood, formally consent to the union. In Mormon society this is considered a very romantic courtship. All Mormon love stories begin and end something like the above.—Salt Lake Cor. N. Y. Sun.

"What shall I do?" asked the plucky little woman, who is in the habit of keeping him company during the early part of his vigils.

"Go for the net! Drive them off! Take my overcoat with you and save all you can!"

In the almost white-heat glow of the lamp, outside of whose radiance everything was impenetrable blackness, a spectacle was presented unequalled in any of Dore's grotesque imaginings. Through the light, like notes in a sun-beam and thicker than mosquitoes, hundreds of dazed and frenzied birds, of various sizes, were circling and gyrating, performing a mad aerial dance around and round the lantern.

Mrs. Wolf came in directly. "I can do nothing with them," she said; "there are thousands and thousands of them." From out the bulging pockets of the overcoat birds began to fly, now dashing at the windows as if to get out again, and the three or four palpitating feathered mites she held in each hand began struggling to get free. They were of many hues, these Southern travelers thus arrested and carried out of their Northward migratory course, although in the fierce splendor of the illuminated air outside they had all appeared luminous and white. There were robins, flickers, mud-hens, and a few rail-birds, and one poor little pee-wit, perching itself sociably on its rescuer's shoulder, uttered its peculiar note.

"Did you notice that scarlet tanager in the house as you came up?" asked Abraham Wolf, the keeper, of his guest, the scribe. "Well, that gorgeous fellow got here from the West Indies somehow. I picked him up in the net one night during a heavy thunder storm. The net, you see, is on the land side, where all the birds come, and keeps them from spattering their blood on the glass. But the wild ducks, they tear the net to shreds. We have had a few spring birds the last week or two, but this is the first large flock. Our house during the summer is nearly always full of them. We leave them loose and let them go where they want to. One night my wife and I took over 300 birds alive, and let them go next morning. Rail-birds, cat-birds, wood-thrush, thistle-birds, and all the self-billed fly-catchers are the most numerous, but we get almost every sort. I keep a record of their visits for the American Ornithological Society to help throw light on migration. I like to

The first object sighted by the passenger by steamer from this city to Portland, Or., after the vessel has fairly crossed the bar on the south channel entrance of the Columbia river, is a bold promontory named Chinook Point. It rises from 800 to 1,000 feet above the level of the sea, is four miles inside of the reef, eight miles northwest of Astoria, and, in connection with Cape Disappointment, forms the semicircular sheet of water known as Baker's Bay. Like all the shores of the Lower Columbia, it is densely wooded with mighty pines, cedars and firs, which rise to a height of 200 and even 300 feet, and seen from a distance of one mile appear to stand as thick as bristles on a hog's back. Rounding this prominent landmark there is seen a slight curve in the water-line, which forms the frontage, looking across the estuary toward Astoria, of a few acres of low-lying and level land, which was partly cleared of its timber growth thirty-three years ago. A rivulet tumbles down through a precipitous channel, entering the salt water after passing through this light in the landscape. Here was once, and perhaps for ages, the home and headquarters of the Chinook Indians, the tribe after which the Hudson's Bay Company named the lingo known as "Chinook jargon," which for two centuries was the medium of linguistic communication between its traders and all the tribes of the great river, Puget Sound, the Gulf of Georgia and the entire possession of the great corporation on the waters of the Pacific coast. The entire vocabulary of this new language does not exceed four hundred words, but the different meanings conveyed by the variations in the tone and accent serve the purpose of adjectives and adverbs and multiply the power of the words many fold. Thus, for example, siab or syah literally means the same as the English adverb of distance, "away." But it may be so accented in speech as to signify much more than this. If spoken in the ordinary tone it implies a short distance off. If the distance be, say five or ten miles off, the word is spoken siab-a. If fifty miles, siab-a-a. If five hundred miles, siab-a-a-a. Some of the words are as resonant and graceful as the Latin of the age of Cicero. Others, and by far the most, are as barbarous and guttural as the language of the Gacohas. Mimituse is used alike for "dead," "death," the grave, or the canoe and the clothes in which the dead are invariably deposited. "Clutchman" is the jargon for female, whether a woman, dog, or any other animal. Hivas or higas is either an adjective or an adverb, which may indicate size, strength, distance, weight, measure, but always implies something big or uncommon of its kind.

It is needless to add that this is not the original language of any tribe, or of the Chinooks. It was compounded by the traders for the purpose of trade with this particular tribe. It naturally found its way into the spoken language of the Oregon and Washington Territory whites, and the ability to use it freely was once regarded by them as an accomplishment. It is an accomplishment that stands on the same level with the more pretentious pedantry of interlarding bad French, or Spanish, or Latin with good English. The mixture is disgustingly vulgar.—San Francisco Chronicle.

In a Base-Ball Factory.

"The base-ball manufacturing business has had a rapid but prosperous growth," said a manufacturer recently. "It is confined to a few men, and probably will not be encroached upon by speculators. There are in the United States to-day only eight factories of any importance, and yet these are entirely sufficient to supply all the base-balls that are wanted in this country. Recently there has been a sort of a 'boom' in the ball market. This is caused by the adopting by clothing-houses throughout the country of the custom of giving to juvenile purchasers base-balls as presents. The balls are of different grades and prices. The kind that are given away are of course cheap but quite durable. Perhaps you would like to see how base-balls are made. Follow me and I will show you the whole process."

On the upper floor of the establishment sat several men with baskets of dampened cambric and buckskin clippings at their sides. Before each workman stood a stout piece of joint, in the end of which was inserted a mold, hemispherical in shape, in which the balls are formed. Taking a handful of cuttings from the basket the workmen pressed them together in his hands and then worked about the mass a few yards of strong wooden yarn. Placing the embryo ball in the mold he pounded it into shape with a heavy flat mallet, and then wound on more yarn and gave the ball another pounding. After testing its weight on a pair of scales and its diameter with a tape measure he threw the ball into a basket and began another. When the newly-made balls are thoroughly dried they are carried to the sewing-room on the floor below, where they are to receive their covers. Forty young women sat at tables sewing on the covers of horse-hide. Grasping a ball firmly in her left hand, with her right hand one of the young women thrust a three-cornered needle through the thick pieces of the cover and drew them firmly together. In less than ten minutes her work was completed. A smart girl can cover two or three dozen of the best and eight dozen of the cheaper grades of balls in a day. The wages earned weekly range from seven to nine dollars. The balls are afterward taken to the packing-room, where the seams are smoothed down and the proper stamps are put on. The best balls are made entirely of yarn and India-rubber.

Most excellent is the intent of the law proposed in the New York Assembly for prohibiting the vicious literature which is turning American boys into savages and rendering it problematical whether the next generation will be Jesse James, or Jay Goulds.

In the large majority of these cases the boys were readers of the newspapers and books whose heroes are of the type of Jesse James, or some other infernal scamp who figures in the vile trash that waylays boys on nearly every street corner and seduces them into buying and reading it by its coarse wood-cuts and sensational engravings.

And this moral plague, like physical pestilence, knows no distinction. The boys reared in decent, and even superior houses, subject to all the educational appliances of the day—from the kindergarten to the Sunday-school—are as much exposed to its deadly influences as the neglected and the ignorant.

Nor is the evil imaginary and high-colored. The constantly increasing number of these cases is not accidental. The cause is increasing, because the source of it is growing larger, and the question what is to be done about it is growing very serious.

In legislation on this subject some of the Southern States are ahead of the Northern; but experience takes away even the little comfort felt in the passage of laws, for it is the defect in law enforcement that is at the bottom of these evils.

A Burial in 1664.

The unveiling of the tablet with the bust of Pepsys in the church of St. Olave's yesterday took place on the anniversary of his brother Tom's burial in that church more than two centuries ago, namely: On the 18th of March, 1664.

Wanted to Raise It.

The case being argued was old Farmer Closegrip vs. a railroad company for damages sustained in a collision.

The old man's lawyer was making a pitiful appeal to the jury—"Gentlemen of the jury," he said, "just gaze upon the true, honest, time-beaten face of my client, and suppose he had been fatally wounded; think of the sad blow that his loving wife and little, innocent children would have to receive; but, thank heaven, it was not so bad as that.

"Judge, excuse my breakin' in, but I must speak!"

"Go on," commanded the Court.

"I didn't know it wer so bad as it is, sir, till the gentleman that sot down, an' of ye'll let me, I'll—I'll—here he faltered.

"You'll what?" asked his honor.

It was only in last July that the Bureau of Statistics began to publish the figures showing the exports of oleomargarine. The latest revised statement gives the movement of "imitation butter" and "oil" for the month of October and for the ten months ended October 31 in each of the years 1882 and 1883.

In October there were 222,741 pounds of so-called "imitation butter" and 3,908,064 pounds of oil exported, a total of 4,130,805 pounds, valued at $516,655.

The exports of butter for the same month amounted to only 2,957,733 pounds, valued at $572,446, so that the bogus-butter manufacturers are getting a pretty large share of the foreign trade whatever they may be doing for the domestic market.

For the ten months ended October 31 the exports of imitation butter amounted to 1,638,712 pounds, valued at $198,925, and of oil to 31,601,926 pounds, valued at $4,104,105, making a total of over $3,000,000 pounds, valued at $4,800,000.

The cause for the great excess in shipments of the imitation article will probably be found in its relative cheapness, the average price of the artificial butter exported during the ten months having been 11 cents and of the oil a little less than 13 cents per pound, while genuine butter averaged over 18 cents per pound.

The Muscles.

The chief function of the muscles is to contract, and thus to move a given part by drawing toward itself the tendon which connects the two—the part and the muscle.

Again, even those whose ordinary movements are determined by the will, can be operated on independently of it by what is called "reflex" nervous action.

This is so with the convulsive movements of hysteria, epilepsy, etc. Habitual acts become in time largely, if not wholly, reflex, thus relieving the mind from superintending them.

No one knows what the moving force is which so wonderfully plays between the brain and the muscles. It is not electricity, although the muscles even of a dead man can be moved by this latter force.

Sometimes, as in cholera (St. Vitus dance), there is a wild movement of the muscles, often fearfully violent and utterly uncontrollable.

The muscles retain more or less of their peculiarity for a time after death. The heart of some animals will beat for hours removed from the body.

The Future of Our Earth.

If the force at the back of all growth, all complexity and all change on earth is that which the sun has steadily supplied to it through countless ages, and still supplies, it is plain that when this force fails, as fail it one day must, there will be a steadily declining development and a rapidly increasing regeneration of things, an undoing by regressive decompositions of what has been done by progressive combinations through the succession of the ages.

Next to being a famous hero is the advantage of looking like one—at least, it may be sometimes an advantage in situations of peril.

Ben had gone with his tin bucket after water to boil our tea, when, coming suddenly back, he rushed into the tent with looks of wild amazement, exclaiming:

"Injuns, sah! Injuns, shore's you live! I done hear 'em yell!"

"We'll nebbber see Washin'ton agin, sah!" cried the terrified fellow.

"Shut up, Ben! Do you suppose I would leave such a nice camping-place as this, and travel all night before I found another?"

"No, sah; but—bu— What'd do use ob nice campin' groun' if yo's got to be killed on it?"

He had scarcely reached the fire before half-a-dozen drunken Indians came staggering up to it.

I ran my fingers through the guards of two of my pistols, and springing to my feet, took the Indian by the neck and gave him a shove.

In an instant all the knives were put up and the rifles lowered, and I became the object of a general gaze.

My hair being gray and having grown unusually long, and my habit being to wear it thrown up from my forehead, this Indian, who had doubtless seen General Jackson, concluded that the old white chief was sure enough before him.

Now, a word or two about the best practice in quail-shooting. This game when flushed rises with a suddenness and force that are quite trying to the eyes and nerves of young shooters.

When your dog has pointed game, do not rush suddenly forward to flush it. Consider a moment, and look about the landscape to see if any person or animal is visible.

When the bird will rise in a steep incline to the height of, perhaps, ten or fifteen feet, and there steady itself for a strong, straight flight.

When you are at the time it begins to fly level, you will find your shot most satisfactory.
