MURDER

Thompson Station the Scene of a Stabbing Affair.

Last Tuesday morning, Thompson station, just over the line in Ogemaw county, on the Rose City branch of the D. & M. R. R.. was the scene of a stabbing affair, which resulted in the death or Samuel Lavalley.

Up to going to press we have been unable to secure the particulars of the affair, but it seems to be the result of a neighborhood quarrel, which has been in progress for some time. About 2 o'clock Tuesday morning fire was discovered in a building, and before it was got under control, four or five buildings had been destroyed.

During the re Alex St. Mary and Samuel Levalley, between whom there had previsously been trouble, became involved in a quarrel, when tor Kidder, who has been off on his St. Mary stabbed Levally killing him instantly. St. Mary went immediately to Rose City and surrended himself to the officers, and is now in jail at West Branch.

It is generally believed that the fire was started by someone, out of spite work, and much excitement prevailed in that locality. We understand that the buildings burned belonged to Silas Doane, Frank Smith, Lon Martindale and St. Mary and composed the largest portion of the yillage.

The next meeting of the Association will be held at the city hall next who wishes to aid in the building up of Tawas City, is requested to attend and join the organization. It is impossible for one or two to accomplish a great deal, but by the aid and support of all, much may be done. What helps one, helps all, and consequently the most humble should attend and help the cause along.

Turn out and see what is being done, even if you do not feel disposed to aid.

In The Kitchen.

CROWN

From now on for two months more the busy housewife's reception room must be her kitchen. There will be all the jars and kettles and bottles, which have been hidden away since the spring cleaning, arrayed before her, awaiting to be cleansed and scalded with boiling water, and put in the sun a day or two. Then she must see, too, that the rubbers and tops are clean and sweet also. The rubber rings-if she uses them-can be bought for five or ten cents a dozen, and it would pay to get new ones Manager McGuire has a rare treat every year, rather than run the risk in store for the patrons of the opera of having the fruit spoil. The jars in house, Saturday Aug. 24, having which pickles of any kind have been are not safe repositories for fruit. Bouzy Hogs.

Prof. J. W. Roberts, of New York, in a recent address told a rather funny story in connection with feeding a lot of hogs. He used to feed about 600 a year and used whey largely. The man whose business it was to look after them on one occasion allowed alcohal fermentation to start up in the whey, and all the hogs, about seventy in a lot, got on a booze. The professor describes it as a study in animal husdandry and moral philosophy combined. There was a funny hog, which would tickle the others and run along and laugh. There was the fighting hog that would show his tusks and snarl, and then there was the sluggish hog that would lie on the ground and grunt. After all, there is a closer connection between hogs and men, when placed under like circumstances and conditions, that we are sometimes wont to believe. - The

Why Sell Half-Fatted Stock.

A glance at the live stock markets of the country show that the receipts of thin sheep still continues to be large, and, we are informed, that a large number of these sheep come from our own state of Michigan. We wish again to call attention to the great loss, to the breeder and grower, which must of necessity follow such a course. Such a practice will have a tendency to discourage the stock raiser and ultimately drive him out of the business. We suggested, in a previous article upon this subject, that it would be far better if the farmer would chattle mortgage this stock to obtain money with which to purchase grain to feed until it could be marketed to advantage. We wish again to call the attention to this plan and to advise the adoption of such a course by all who cannot hold the stock without.

that this stock must be held until it is | ing of the room, for the draught will fat in order to dispose of it to good | destroy their unpleasant odor and advantage. There is very little doubt | they will destroy the unpleasant odor that the time will soon come when of disease. there will be a much more active demand for sheep for feeders; already this demand begins to be felt upon the cattle market and thin stock which would have brought a very low price a short time ago when the market was glutted with this class of stock is taken promptly at outside figures, and the only fault found is that the supply is entirely too small for the demand. We predict that the same conditions will soon prevail in the sheep market which is at present so badly overstocked with this stock.

The prospect of an abundant corn crop has a direct bearing upon the situation. Feeders are beginning to realize that there will be plenty of corn to feed the stock which is now in the country and the sooner the farmer makes up his mind that this is the case, the more likely will he be to get a fair price.—Free Press.

How to Raise a Pine Forest.

Ex-Gov. D. F. Davis, of Bangor, Me., who is personally interested in the cultivation of pine time, recently gave the following advice to the Industrial Journal, of that city, on the nethods of raising a pine forest.

Regarding the thick growth of pine it would be well to thin it out by removing perhaps a fourth of the growth, not more. Should an attempt be made to thin out a greater proportion, there would be greater danger of seriously injuring those trees that it is desirable to spare. Were this not done, nature would, it is true, perform the work herself, but so gradually that the benefit would not be apparent for a long time. The partial clearing of the land thus affected would set in light and air, and the welcome sunlight would work marvels with the trees in a comparatively short time.

Unless it is desirable to make a resort or picnic ground of the place, do not make any effort to remove the dead limbs from the trees, Should these dead limbs be lopped off, the natural result would be for the bark to grow over the ends, and during the process create a hole in the tree, where water will collect, and, remaining will run down into the wood and make there a unsightly spot in the log, which will destroy just so much of its merchantable value when it comes to the manufacturer. If left to itself, the tree will dispose of these dead superfluities in its own way, and a mark or blemish will show ov once were, as in time they

By all means let the hard woods remain, as they are one of the most valuale aids to the profitable cultivation of pine trees. By their annual deposits of the dead leaves they add both body and richness to the soil about them, and those who have given the matter attention and thought, find that pine trees which have been placed in open locations, with many hardwood trees in the vicinity, have been enabled to grow more rapidly and retain their hardness better under those conditions. In fact the growth of trees so placed as compared let them ply their work and multiply with a thick growth of trees, has often seemed but little short of marvellous.

In The Sick Room.

Do not add to the trials of the patient by keeping constantly before him medicine bottles, glasses and spoons. Let all these reminders of his low estate be out of sight on a neatly arranged table behind a screen or in the alcove, which it is wise to have off every sick-room. To keep medicine and suggestions of medicine before the invalid is about as humane as to treat a condemed prisioner to daily glimpses of the scaffold.

The sick-room should be odorless. The air must be let in freely and as often as possible. Pile extra blankets and comfortables over the invalid; tie up his head, so that the wind may find no spot at which to attack him, and open the windows and doors wide. Disfectants are generally disagreeable It does not follow by any means but they may be used during the air-

The bedclothes and the patient's linen must be changed every day. Fresh clothing and fresh sheets will do much to prevent the atmosphere from becoming "stuffy." The patient should be bathed as often as the physician permits. He should not. however, be bathed without the doctor's knowledge and direction, for baths are as effective as medicines, and their effects are sometimes as disastrous as that of the wrong medi-

Never ask the patient what he wishes to eat, but keep an attentive ear open for any chance words he may say on the subject. Feed him according to the doctor's directions. Never bring him much food at one time. It will destroy his appetite. Let the tray be very daintily arranged and never let it remain in the sick-room for an instant after the meal is over. Even a healthy person will be revolted by the sight of scraps of food and unwashed dishes.

The windows should be shaded with dark green holland shades, which will temper the glare of light for the sufferer's eyes. At night there should be a shaded night-light in the room. A screen should always be placed so that no direct rays may fall upon the patient's eyes.

The nurse should be neatness, quickness; quietness and good cheer personified. Her slippers should be noiseless felt affairs, Her skirts should not rustle. Her gown must be neither too sombre nor too bright. Her apron must be spotless and unrumpled, her hair smooth and shining her patience inexhaustible and her good-cheer perpetual. She must rule the rest of the family with a rod of irou, permitting no noisy visitors, no gloomy visitors, no visitors who will relate tales of business or of household worry.-N. Y. World.

A New Departure Needed.

The onward march of weeds is frightful. A series of maps illustrating how the principal weeds have spread from year to year would be an eye-opener. It would doubtless show that the ox-eye daisy, starting in a small way, had spread each year over great tracts of land hitherto uninfested with it, until its complete eradication was well-nigh impossible. So of the Canada thistle and its cousin, the Russian thistle, wild mustard and wild carrot, the various bur and dock weeds, and a host of others.

The same is true of the spread of Orange Judd Farmer.

black knot, peach yellows, fungus pests, blights, etc. It is true, however, that certain fungi are of such a nature that under peculiarly favorable climatic conditions they may sweep in waves across vast areas, as is the case with black rot of the grape, potato blight, etc; yet even in such eases, science has provided methods of insurance by spraying in advance with appropriate mixtures. Insect pests also spread, like weeds and fungi, because the few who combat their ravages are as naught to those who their species. The San Jose scale is one of the latest instances in point, for the indications now are that this most serious pest has obtained a foothold in spots over large areas.

The trouble is that no concerted action is made to stamp out these pests when they first appear. Individuals spend in the aggregate millions of dollars yearly trying to hold in subjection weeds, insects and fungi, yet their efforts are of comparatively little avail because others in both town and country permit the pests to mature and spread their seeds and eggs or spores, which are also distributed in nursery stock, seeds, etc, until there seems to be a natural conspiracy to extend the pest.

Is this to last forever? Is this terrible waste and loss to continue year after year simply because the American idea of personal independence stands in the way of enforcing the duties of the individual to the community? There is certainly a big chance here for co-operative effortboth private and under the administration of township, county or state. California horticulture would have been ruined but for her laws for the inspection of vineyards and orchards and the destruction of all pests, in the rigorous enforcement of which the officials have had the earnest co-operation of individuals. But for Massachusett's plucky efforts to keep the gypsy moth within bounds, that most serious of all insect pests might to-day be denuding the entire foliage in whole states. Other states have made more or less spasmodic efforts to control these pests. New York's black knot law has just been made more stringent. Michigan's new law for compulsory spraying we have recently referred to. Several states have peach yellow laws that have done good. What is needed is a grand crusade all along the line-a concerted movement on the part of the individual, school district, township, borough, city, county and nation against weeds insects and fungi. How to combat these plagues is now quite well understood, thanks to the efforts of our scientists, experiment stations and the department of agriculture. All indications point to further progress and simpler and still more effective methods of dealing with these nuisances. What is needed is to impart this information to the people, and means of enforcing the widespread application of tried remedies and safeguards, not excepting the protection of birds and other animals so useful in destroying insects.

A system must be devised that, while offering every inducement to the individual to keep his premises clear of these pests, shall provide for its being done if he fails to attend to it, the cost to be added to the taxes on such premises and collected in like manner. The ingenuity of the American people and their capacity for selfgovernment ought to enable them to perfect such a system without infringing unnecessarily on individual rights, and without erecting a combrous officialism that would be more bother than it is worth. A practicable scheme for a concerted crusade against these pests, with the farmer's co-operation, would be worth far more to them than nine-tenths of the much agitated political "reforms." And such a scheme can be worked out without interfering with these other reforms. With the proper plan we venture to declare that the millions of dollars and untold work and energy now spent yearly in trying to hold in subjection the pests named, would accomplish the job. Certainly the increased expense would be slight .-

BAZAAR,

The twenty fourth annual report of the Evangelical church of Italy shows that there are 26 churches and 35 stations, with 132 places visited regularly. There are 21 ordained ministers, 10 evangelists and 8 colporteurs; the communicants number 1,697 and the adherents 6,315.

Some persons and some papers make much of the fact that Bishop Potter, of New York, instead of taking his regular summer vacation this year, went down to the Stanton Street Mission, among the poorest and densest population of the city, in order that he might relieve the deacon in charge and himself carry on the preaching and minister to the poor. But, on the other hand, there are those who think the Bishop's action commendable, but can see nothing in it beyond his plain duty. We should be a living example of what we teach and preach. Christ associated with publican and sinners. Let us hope that Dr. Potter's example may prove contagious and that both he and the east siders may be greatly blessed in the work.-N. Y. World.

The attention of our readers is directed to an article in this issue from the Orange Judd Farmer, entitled a "New Departure Needed." This is a subject of much importance. Notwithstanding that there is a law on the statute books of Michigan prohibiting it, there is growing and going to seed within the limits of this city, a large number of Canada thistles and other obnoxious weeds. What is to be done about it? We hope we will not have the occasion to mention this matter again, as we might make some mad by being personal.

Let the bloomers bloom. Let us raise them on the flag poles of our public buildings and houses, and fold them to our hearts until every pulse thrills and throbs with ecstasy. Let us realize that bloomers are a thing of beauty and a joy forever, firing and inspiring not only the rapt soul of the penniless poet, but the cold bosom of the man of affairs, whose thoughts are not supposed to stray from a sordid channel. Let us nail a pair of bloomers to the blooming masthead and clap on all sail.—Hamilton (Ont.) Herald.
