"It's about some money that my husband left." she said for a beginning.

"Is he dead?" "Yes, sir; I'm Bill Nellton's widow." "The notorious—excuse me, madam the celebrated desperado who killed so many men?"

"The same one." "Did he leave much of a fortune?"

"A good deal for me; about $10,000." "A very snug little sum, I am sure," miled the lawyer with a yearning smile. "But it isn't mine altogether," she explained.

"Why not?" "That's what I come to see you about. Perhaps it is mine."

"Tell me the particulars." "Well, it's this way: You see, when married Bill I was poor and had no home, and I married him because he had money, and I thought there was a good RURAL free delivery is making chance of my getting it, for, you know, Bill went around with his life in his hands all the time. He knowed I never 30. married him for love, but he didn't care about that so long as I would marry him. He said he was likely to go any time with his boots on and was willing for me to marry again, but he wanted me to marry a better man than he was, and he made a will leaving me everything on condition that I would marry the man that killed him. That suited me well enough, because I knew there wasn't any less desirable man for a husband than Bill was, so I agreed to it in writing. Then Bill went it too strong and got the sheriff after him for shooting a man without provocation, and the sheriff had been an old beau of mine, and Bill didn't like the looks of things and what did he do when he was close pushed but shoot himself." "Oh!" exclaimed the lawyer, startled by the suddenness of the tale. "And he done it just to spite me," whimpered the widow, "for with that signed agreement of mine along with the will what was I to do? That's what I've come to see you about. I can't very well marry the man that killed Bill, and Miss Nancie MacArthur. Precepif I marry anybody else I'm going to lose $10,000. As soon as Bekel saw my face he seemed stricken with terror. He leaped from his horse, knocked rather than pushed me down and with the fingers of both ance under my eye.

The pain was terrible, and I yelled in my agony until I think I must have fainted, although I well remember one of the Kirghiz coming with a long knife, when at once the idea entered my brain that they meant to "do for" me. The knife, however, was used only to extract the sting of the taraptula

The Bray est Thing

That eminent and popular writer Col. T W Higgenson of Boston, was recently asked regarding the bravest thing done during the civil war within his knowledge. He wrote: "On mature reflection, I should aw ard the pslm to something done by a young assistant surgeon of mine, not quite twenty-one years old, Dr. T. Miner, then of Hartford, Cona., at an exceeding convivial supper party of officers, to wihch a few of my younger subalterns had been invited. "They sat late, and the fun grew fast and furious, the songs sung becoming gradually of that class which Thackray's Colonel Necomb did not approve. Some of the guest tried to get away but could not; and those who attempted it were required to furnish in each case a song, a story

Miner was called upon for his share and there was a little hush as he rose up. He had a singularly boyish face, and his manliness of character was known to all. He said, 'Gentlemen. J cannot give you a song or a story, but I will offer a toast which I will drink in water, and you shall drink as you please. That toast is 'Our

"Of course an atom of priggishness or self-consciousness would have speiled the whole suggestion. No such quality was visible; the shot told; the party quited down from that moment and soon broke up.

"The next morning no less than three officers from different regiments rode out to my camp, all men older than Mr. Miner and of higher rank, to thank him for the simplicity and courage of his rebuke. It was from them I first learned what had happened. And one who has had much to do with young men will admit, I think, that it cost more courage to do what he did than to ride up to the cannon's mouth,"- Charlotte Tribune.

FARM NOTES.

An excelent addition to the winter food is sweet milk, and the fowls may be given all they will drink of it once a day.

There is nothing better for sheep than good blan. They like it. It keeps the bowels in good condition, and seems to be what they need to build rp bone and tissue.

When a hen begins to dump and her comb looks limp and pale the best medicine for her is an application of cold steel to her neck. A sick hen is the poorest kind of property.

will be too late to be of much a sharp piece of glass rather than service unless the manure be a round, smooth pebble. She thoroughly rotted.

Where a drove of pigs are fed shelled corn in a trough they will eat rapidly and not grind the corn thoroughly with their teeth, or mix saliva enough to make thorough digestion possible. By scattering the corn on clear hard ground, or on a feeding floor, conclusion that hens require more they will be forced to eat more grit, when laying than at any sowly, and consequently grinds the corn better.

Don't expect your milch cow to furnish her quota milk and butter if she be left to hustle with the rest of the stock. If she is to do her best she must be fed regularly and well, and must be protected from the cold storms and sudden changes of winter, Winter milking don't pay unless the cow is well treated.

The successful farmer will take extra good care of his sheep from now on. This, means that he will feed them good hay, and plenty of it, a ration of bran daily, now and then varied by a ration of oats, or a few small potatoes or turnips, if he have them, and see that they are kept out of the wet

The benefit derived from soaking the corn before feedingnto hogs, cattle and horses is of questionable. The reason it is not more generally practised is because of the trouble of soaking and feeding the soaked corn, A kerosene barrel mounted on wheels will make the handiest cart tank for soaking and feeding corn. Best results come from soaking twelve hours. Longer does not add to the softness of the kernel. nd it should not become so

It is well known that the destruction of hay barns by fire is often stributed to spontaneous combustion. In regard to this the Scientific American says: far more than this and of course The question of the spontaneous combustion of hay has recently been investigated by one of the officials of the weather boreau, who states that fermentation within moist hay may raise the temperature to 374 degrees F., at which temperature clover hay will ignite. The best preventive of spontaneous combustion is a rapid and complete ventilation by which the oxidation and fermenting substances are cooled down below the point of ignition.

Some owners have come to the other time, but it is because they require more feed which calls for more grit to do the grinding. There are many kinds of grit in the market that will give excellent satisfaction. Owners of hens should consult their own situation and buy it if deemed profitable. Broken crockery ware is an excellent grit for poultry and is within the reach
