Her BOOK of Sorrows

THERE was once a young lady who had much trouble. Everything that happened to her seemed in some way to bring her grief. She finally came to believe herself born to ill luck.

At length this girl who was born unlucky resolved to keep a diary, in which she would set down each trouble that happened to her day by day, with the date. So said, so done. She got a leather bound, gilt edged diary, the cover dead black as was fitting, and there she put down daily the mournful record of her griefs as follows:

"Jan. 1, 1879.—Had a terrible toe ache all day.

"Jan. 2.—Billy Jones did not call yesterday evening as he promised, and this morning I heard he went to a party with Susan White instead, and he has told her that he will go to her church and sing in the choir. It breaks my heart, for Billy Jones has been calling on me six weeks regularly. But there it is again—I wonder why it is that every girl but me has a beau!

"Jan. 3.—Party at the Y. M. C. A. Social hall last night, and I wasn't invited. I sat up stairs at my window in the dark and saw Billy Jones go by with Susan White, and I just sat there and cried myself to sleep. Oh, dear, I wish I were dead, so I do!

"Jan. 4.—My birthday. Not a soul came to call or congratulate me. Not even my own mother thought to make me the least little bit of a present. Other girls get presents on their birthdays, and their friends remember it and call. Why was I born into a family where even my own father and mother are hard and indifferent to my feelings? Why does a shadow hang over me from my birth? Tears, only tears and loneliness. Nobody appreciates me, nobody understands me.

"Jan. 5.—Today out walking I lost the beautiful bunch of baby blue feather ostrich tips off my hat. I just cried myself sick over it. Mother said it served me right for not fastening it on tight. Even in the least little things my evil star pursues me. When I am dead and slumber beneath the cold ground, I wonder if my folks will weep for me!"

In the contemplation of her griefs her girlhood passed. Woebegone lines settled around her mouth and drooping cheeks. Her complexion became a pale coffee color. There was even about her temples a gray hair or two. These she was secretly a little proud of as evidencing her hidden sorrow.

Then suddenly one day fate took her by the collar and shook her from her toes up and made her go to working for her living. She had to leave home at 7 in the morning, and she did not return till 7 at night. Then she was so dead tired she could only eat her dinner and slump into bed, where they say she actually snored, she was so sleepy. She never complained again of being unable to sleep. She never made another record in her journal of sorrows.

Time went on apace till it was twenty years after. Jeannette Morrison—did I tell you her name was Jeannette Morrison?—was a plump woman of forty-five. She had been forced to give all her time and thought to her affairs. She developed a shrewd business talent, which she had possessed all along and did not know it. To be successful she was forced to put on a cheerful appearance whether she felt like it or not, and thus a pleasant look at last became habitual to her. She and a woman friend had a neat little shop together; also a neat little home. One Sunday morning her partner heard her shrieking with laughter.

"What's the matter, Jeannie Morrison? Are you crazy?"
"Crazy! No! But look here. It's my journal of sorrows that I kept when I was eighteen, and it's the funniest thing I ever did see—better than any joke book I ever read. I had forgotten all about it. Do read this!"
KATE SHARP.

What Would Early Say?

General Fitz-Hugh Lee, who distinguished himself in the Confederate service and is now on the regular army retired list as a brigadier general, recently went on a visit to West Virginia. While there he met an old comrade in arms whose reception was somewhat frigid.

"Well, what's the matter?" said General Lee.

"Oh, nothing much," was the noncommittal reply.

"There is something wrong," persisted the general. "Out with it! What do you want?"

After being strenuously urged the old comrade said:

"Well, I want to die at least half an hour before you do. I want to be in the other world when you arrive there just to hear what General Jubal Early says when he sees you in a blue uniform."

A Quick Reply.

Lord Palmerston's reception of Louis Kossuth when the latter visited England brought upon him a peremptory rebuke from the prime minister, Lord John Russell. Palmerston wrote the following reply:

My Dear John Russell—I have just read your letter today and am told your messenger waits for an answer. My reply, then, is immediate and is that there are limits to all things, that I do not choose to be dictated to as to who I may or may not receive in my own house and that I shall use my own discretion in this matter. You will, of course, use yours as to the composition of your government. I have not detained your messenger five minutes.

A Sample of Modesty.

"Modest!" said Colonel Harry Hall, speaking of a statesman he knows. "Why, he is as modest as a certain young chap out in Pittsburg who works on the Sunday edition of a newspaper owned by his relatives. When he came of age, the relatives elected him a director. One day he asked the Sunday editor if he could get off for an hour, saying he wanted to attend a meeting of the board of directors of the paper."—Washington Cor. New York World.

"We always give the under dog in a fight our sympathy," remarked the observer of events and things. "The other dog does the rest."

"The man who doesn't own a horse or a wife," remarked the observer of events and things, "has no business buying bonnets."—Yonkers Statesman.

Another big increase in the earnings of Michigan railroads is shown by the statement for March, issued by Railroad Commissioner Osborne. The total Michigan earnings for the month were $3,554,339.65, as against $3,242, 421.94 for the corresponding month of last year, an increase of $311,867.71.

A movement has been started in Lansing to form a church trust. The plan is to close up all the churches in small towns but one, thus doing away with the drain upon the community to support so many small congregations and at the same time supply the people with better service. Such a plan is said to be in successful operation in several states.—Ex.

Years ago it was a serious problem what to do with the bran resulting from the conversion of wheat into flour at the stone mill, and much of it was allowed to run into the millrace to float down the stream. It is different now; bran brings $20 per ton at the mill and most of it is shipped to Battle Creek, where it is mixed with black strap molasses and converted into a "health" food or drink.—*Albion barely nothing, and the work is a pleasure.

At various places throughout the country labor unions are declaring a 30 day boycott on meat dealers and are calling on other citizens to join them in refusing to buy meat for that time.
Their purpose does not seem to be to injure the retail meat cutters so much as the big wholesale combine, therefore notice is given in advance so that the retailers can countermand orders.

them by the chorus, a solo and other special music. All who do not attend church elsewhere are invited to worship with us.

The Bay City Tribune of Wednesday contained the news confirming the report of the death of Oliver Carter in Alaska. The information was in a letter from Carl Bens, of Bay City, who is located at Teller, Alaska, and states that Mr. Carter became lost on the trail near that place and was frozen to death, his body afterward being found. The deceased was formerly a resident of this city, being employed as a clerk by C. H. Prescott & Sons.

Just after dinner last Wednesday the old house on the bay shore, known as the Sandy Brown house, was discovered to be on fire and was entirely destroyed. It was owned by J. W.
King, and for the past four weeks has been occupied by Joseph Person, who was under quarantine with smallpox.
The patient had entirely recovered and was to have been released that afternoon. He had eaten his dinner a short time previous to the discovery of the fire and gone out to the river bank, and when discovered the fire had gained much headway. No effort was made to save the building owing to the contagion. The loss will be small as the building was an old one and had not been occupied for some years.

Will Johnson, a former well known and popular young man of this city, was fatally injured while in the discharge of his duties as yard master for the D. S. S. & A. Ry., at Duluth, last Friday. It appears that he was watching a train when a car was switched back striking him and cutting off his right leg and otherwise injuring him, from the effects of which he died Saturday. The deceased was the son of Mr. and Mrs. John Johnson, of East Tawas. The remains arrived Tuesday and the funeral was held from the East Tawas M. E. Church Wednesday forenoon. The services were conducted by Revs. Sheldon and Kay. The deceased was about 28 years of age, and leaves a wife and one child and a large circle of relatives and friends to mourn his untimly end.

A FASHION LOOK AHEAD.

The Habit Cloth Du Barry—Angora and Lama For Fall.

Just now many beautiful new materials are to be seen in the great, dingy and hard to reach importing houses. I do not intend an insult about the dinginess, for that word applies mostly to the approaches, where splinters from immense packing cases and nails make traveling a difficult affair. And there is much dust also, but not on the goods, be it understood. Materials of all kinds for fall are now on view, and there are sharp men and women buyers already choosing out fine things to have made up at once for those who like to lead in all things pertaining to styles. Later, say in September, we shall see handsome gowns made of these things in the swell stores, so that our ladies who have been studying domestic economy may have ample time to reflect and decide upon the best thing for them to have when the time comes.

All things being considered, a woman can make no mistake when she decides in favor of and chooses a new kind of habit cloth called Du Barry for the ill fated little duchess of that name. This feels like the soft and flexible doeskin, while having all the luster of the finest French broadcloth. It is offered in all the season's colorings and black. This will make a costume which can be worn almost the whole year around. It has been treated in some way which renders it proof against spots. Its width allows the present and probably the future skirt to be cut to good advantage. It is peculiarly adapted for fine tailor suits.

The angora and lama as well as camel's hair are all among the new fall stuffs, but though old in themselves, there is something new in color, weave or design in every case, and yet they are near enough to the older styles to allow the clever woman to take advantage of the similarity. There is one cloth called kraal, which has an entirely new weave embodying chevron and camel's hair in one perfect fabric. The colors are all kinds and black. The camel's hair effect is carried out in another stuff in a most remarkable way and is called llama. The surface of the goods is exactly like velvet, though of this wool, and there are tiny polka dots all over the surface. In navy with white dots it is beautiful. So it is in other colors, but this comes, I think, rather more under the head of novelty goods, and the gown, however beautiful it is, cannot be combined with many other things. Strapped, stitched bands in plain color trim it.

Among the other really new stuffs for fall dress goods there are the following, all of them represented in all the season's colors.

There is chamouis, an all wool fabric in almost invisible stripes of white or gray on the colored grounds in warm autumn shades. This is rainproof. It is extremely rich and stylish. Meteor is an etamine with perpendicular tucked stripes. Bristol is another beauty in silk and wool, soft and flexible with admirable draping qualities. This is only in five shades and colors. It is really exquisite. Faustina is a new weave combining melrose and serge. Melrose we all know for its genuine value, and serge our grandmothers knew as one of the most valuable of all stuffs. Now they are brought together, and the result is worthy. This has a corded effect.

Another mingling of two old favorites is found in angora, with a foute effect. Foute means twisted, and this has over the surface a raised twist of the wool. It is very pretty and warm looking. Malva means a stuff with a cord, though the rest of it looks somewhat like a melton. A basket weave etamine is called floretta, and this will certainly be a favorite. There is a skirting for all kinds of heavy and hard usage called vulcan, and this is striped in small and almost invisible checks so arranged that they seem to be stripes made of checks. All these are in just the proper color for the purpose for which they are designed. There is also a London twine cloth called marita, with something of a basket effect. It is extremely neat and appears to have wearing qualities.

I noticed that silkdowne, which was put forward last season, is with us still and more beautiful than ever. This is a twill of silk and wool so fine and firm that it is more beautiful than almost any plain silk. It has a frost and bloom impossible to describe.

HENRIETTE ROUSSEAU.

A Small Boy's Ambition.

My brother Fred's the nicest man, so big an' straight an' tall. Why, he can do all kinds of things that I can't do at all! An' you always hear him whistlin' while he's a-workin' round. Sometimes he doubles up his arm an' says to me, "Now, pound!" An' when I pound him (awful hard) he only laughs at me. When I am big, that's just the kind of man I'm goin' to be.

Sometimes when I've been hammerin' an' the nails won't go in straight. My brother Fred he comes along an' says, "Why, that's first rate!" An' then he takes my hammer, an' he taps just once or twice. An' all those crooked, bent up nails go in as straight an' nice. An' then he laughs an' picks me up till I am taller'n he. An' when I'm big that's just the kind of man I'm goin' to be!

Sometimes when I'm playin' round I break things an' feel bad. But Fred he comes whistlin' along an' says, "Don't look so sad." Then off he goes, an' pretty soon I hear him comin' back. An' what I broke's all mended up so ma can't find the crack! I don't cry then, but laugh, an' mamma laughs, an' so does he. An' when I'm big that's just the kind of man I'm goin' to be!

Once I was sick a-visitin'; I guess I was 'most dead. But my ma she knew what to do—she sent for brother Fred. An' Fred he picked me right straight up an' carried me off home. So easy in his big, strong arms, an' wa'n't I glad to come!

An' I was thinkin' all along as he was bingin' me. "When I am big, Fred's just the kind of man I'm goin' to be!"

A RIVER OF LAND.

Astonishing Amount of Earth That Flows Down the Mississippi.

"The capacity of the Mississippi for filling up canals and old channels is something awful," says John Swain in Ainslee's. "Government engineers have found that the amount of solid matter annually carried past Vicksburg in suspension is enough to make a block of earth 300 feet high and a mile square. Fifty feet off the top of this is spread around on the valley between here and the sea, and the rest goes out into the gulf of Mexico to build up more continent."

"Think what that means. Instead of a river of water this is a river of land. It would make a solid stream of earth five feet deep and nine feet wide, flowing night and day as fast as a man can walk, four miles an hour, all sliding down off the northern half of the country toward the sea. Year in, year out, that endless line of earth goes on. It would take a force of more than 50,000 men working in eight hour shifts to throw the dirt into the stream, supposing the river bed were rigid and an inexhaustible supply of dirt on the bank. It would make 25,000,000 wagon loads every year.

"But here—what are the use of such figures? Below Vicksburg—and above it, too, to an extent—we have the earth itself to speak for it. Except for the occasional fragments of the line of bluffs along the eastern edge below here which bob up at Fort Adams, at Natchez, at Grand Gulf, at Baton Rouge, at Port Hudson, there is nothing about the level of the high water river except the artificial levees. These are in places miles back, great earthen banks, sometimes thirty feet high or more, sodded and free from trees, which protect the wonderfully fertile region behind them.

"And all this level country which the river overflows and fertilizes is constantly increased by this river of dirt which the Mississippi brings down from the inner region, gathered all the way from the Rockies to the Alleghenies. Sometimes the river starts to eat away this land that it has made. In a single summer, if it will, it eats away half a mile of it out of some bend. It cuts it out sometimes an acre at a bite and takes with it forests, houses, levees and all else.

"The river is not a uniformly moving stream. One side or the middle moves swiftly; the other parts are still or sluggish. Sometimes even these run up stream. The swift part is the channel current and runs in the deepest sections. It makes crossings whenever driven off shore by a promontory. These crossings are dumping places for the surplus earth the river has picked up in the bend it is eating."

One of Field's Crazy Jokes.

In his biography of Eugene Field Slason Thompson says that shortly after the humorist's arrival in Chicago it occurred to him one bleak day in December that it was time the people knew there was a stranger in town.

So he arrayed himself in a long linen duster, buttoned up from knees to collar, put an old straw hat on his head and, taking a shabby book under one arm and a palm leaf fan in his hand, he marched all the way down Clark street, past the city hall, to the office. Everywhere along the route he was greeted with jeers or pitying words, as his appearance excited the mirth or commiseration of the passersby.

When he reached the entrance to The Daily News office, he was followed by a motley crowd of noisy urchins, whom he dismissed with a grimace and the cabalistic gesture with which Nicholas Kooran perplexed and repulsed Antony van Corlear from the battlement of the fortress on Rensselaerstein. Then, closing the door in their astonished faces, he mounted the two flights of stairs to the editorial rooms, where he recounted, with the glee of the boy he was in such things, the success of his joke.

THE CHILD'S HAIR.

A Few Hints on How to Take Care of It Properly.

The features of a child cannot be changed, the luster of its eyes cannot be added to, but a child, however plain, can be made attractive by the mother paying attention to two details—its hair and its complexion. A beautiful skin will transform even the ugliest features, and a cloud of silky hair has given more than one woman the illusion of being beautiful. Most mothers are careful of a child's complexion, but neglect its hair; so it is on this subject I am going to speak.

In the first place, it is a great mistake to suppose that frequent washings are bad for the scalp and that children are apt to take cold from having their hair washed.

THAT TORTURING FINE COMB.

If the soap is carefully rinsed out, no possible harm can be caused to the hair, no matter how often it is washed. Secondly, if the hair is carefully dried the child cannot possibly take cold, and indeed, the operation does much to lessen the tendency of some children to colds in the head and sore throat. The custom of wetting the hair before combing or brushing is one which ought to be thoroughly condemned. The hair should be brushed while it is dry until the electricity in it makes it crackle. This will insure a healthy and luxuriant growth more than any tonic in the world. The comb should be used sparingly on a child's tender head, and the use of a fine tooth comb ought to be relegated to a chamber of horrors.

The operation of brushing the hair can be made a very enjoyable one to the child by always associating it with a few pleasant words or a fairy tale. As soon as the child is old enough it should be taught to spend a certain number of minutes brushing its hair every night before going to bed.

The hair should be washed in at least three waters—one with soap and two to rinse with. A cake of pure castile or good tar soap is the only proper thing to use.

DAINTY BEDROOMS.

Cretonne is Much Used Both in City and Country Houses.

An airy, cheerful appearance is one of the essentials of the modern bedroom. It must have large windows, light woodwork and a general absence of the somber draped effects so dear to our mothers.

Cretonne in the heavily ribbed English variety is much used for sleeping apartments both in city and country houses. It is artistic as well as cheap. Very often it is used both to upholster the furniture and to cover the walls. The illustration shows a cretonne room and what is also known as a fitted bedroom. It is so called because it has seats and cupboards fitted into the walls. This is an excellent idea in a small room. The woodwork is white and the cretonne pink and pale green. On each side of the pretty fireplace there are three shelves for books. Instead of a frieze the wall has a series of niches holding graceful bits of jade green ware. To the right closets are built into the wall, and the door of one of these holds a full length mirror.

Everything in this pretty room is planned to economize space.

MADGE MORAN.

The New Parasols.

Parasols are wonderfully made and ornamented with more frills and lace than may easily be mentioned. The Dolly Varden silks are among some of the fancy carriage affairs, and as this silk is mostly offered in thin qualities we see chiffon printed in these old fashioned designs edged with much lace. What did woman ever do without lace? The prettiest of all the parasols are those where the body of the shade is of chiffon, with several floating bouffes, while the whole of the top is overlaid with fine black thread lace. There are some exquisite ones made in this way. Others have black chiffon, with white lace applications.

To the Point.

An incident which occurred while Admiral Dewey was commanding the Asiatic squadron and one which illustrates his independence is one known as "the coal incident."

It seems that his squadron was in need of coal, but instead of writing to the chief of the bureau of equipment at the navy department he purchased a large amount of coal without consulting the department.

The following is the correspondence between the admiral and Captain Bradford, the chief of the bureau of equipment, and is self explanatory:

Navy Department, Washington.
To Dewey, Manila:
Why did you buy so much coal?
BRADFORD.
Flagship Olympia, Manila.
To Bradford, Chief Bureau Equipment, Washington:
To burn. DEWEY.

The Wrong of Intolerance.

The intolerant state of mind is injurious both to the state and to the individual. It goes with conceit and deadly pride. The strange thing is that men are apt to plume themselves upon their intolerance. It is evident that a man's conduct and a nation's conduct should be the result of thought and judgment, but intolerance stops thought and destroys judgment.—Century.

With a Purpose.

"Wasn't there an ungrammatical sentence in one of your speeches?" "There was," answered Representative Husker. "I put it there on purpose. You see, we're plain folks up to Punkin Corners, and I don't want my constituents to think I'm getting proud just because I've come to congress."—Washington Star.

After one woman has convinced a man that she would die for him he begins to look vaguely around to see if there are any more.—Acheson Globe.

Praise of Work Well Done.

Perhaps there is nothing else so productive of cheerful, helpful service as the expression of approval or praise of work well done, and yet there is nothing so grudgingly, so meagerly given by employers. Many of them seem to think that commendation is demoralizing and that the voicing of appreciation will lead to listlessness and the withdrawal of energy and interest. This evinces but a poor knowledge of human nature, which is always hungry for approbation. But how mistaken such views are is shown by the loyal and unstinted service given to those large minded men who treat their employees as members of a family committed to their care.—Success.

Aiding the Heavens.

"Brother Highmore, are you contributing anything for the benefit of the heavens this year?" "Yes, sir. I am having my washing done at a Chinese laundry."—Chicago Tribune.

Mrs. Crimsonbeak—I hear that man is terribly afraid of fire.

Mr. Crimsonbeak—Yes. Would you believe it—he sleeps in asbestos pyjamas every night.

Patience—You say he's excessively polite?

Patrice—I should say so. Why, he was in a photographer's the other day, sitting for his picture, when a lady came in, and he insisted upon her taking his seat.

THE GREAT POETS.

Do Not Study Them For Knowledge; Read Them For Culture.

Young men and young women actually go to college to take a course in Shakespeare or Chaucer or Dante or the Arthurian legends. The course becomes a mere knowledge course. My own acquaintance with Milton was through an exercise in grammar. We parsed "Paradise Lost." Much of the current college study of Shakespeare is little better than parsing him. The class falls upon the text like hens upon a bone in winter. No meaning of phrase escapes them; every line is literally picked to pieces. But of the poet himself, of that which makes him what he is, how much do they get? Very little, I fear. They have had intellectual exercise and not an emotional experience. They have added to their knowledge, but have not taken a step in culture.

To dig into the roots and origins of the great poets is like digging into the roots of an oak or maple tree the better to increase your appreciation of the beauty of the tree. There stands the tree in all its summer glory. Will you really know it any better after you have laid bare every root and rootlet? There stand Homer, Dante, Chaucer and Shakespeare. Read them, give yourself to them, and master them if you are man enough.

The poets are not to be analyzed; they are to be enjoyed; they are not to be studied, but to be loved; they are not for knowledge, but for culture—to enhance our appreciation of life and our mastery over its elements. All the mere facts about a poet's work are as chaff as compared with the appreciation of one fine line or fine sentence. Why study a great poet at all after the manner of the dissecting room? Why not rather seek to make the acquaintance of his living soul and to feel its power?—John Burroughs in Century.

William Shakespeare.

What point of morals, of manners, of economy, of philosophy, of religion, of taste, of the conduct of life, has he not settled? What mystery has he not signified his knowledge of? What office or function or district of man's work has he not remembered? What king has he not taught state, as Talma taught Napoleon? What maiden has he not found him finer than her delicacy? What lover has he not outloved? What sage has he not outseen? What gentleman has he not instructed in the rudeness of his behavior?—Ralph Waldo Emerson.

The Promoters.

"Let us make the capital stock $1,000,000,000," said the first promoter. "All right," said the second, who was preparing the prospectus on the typewriter. "Will it be hard to increase that capital?" asked the first. "No, indeed. All I have to do is to hit the 'O' key a few more times."—Baltimore American.

A Devoted Parent.

"Dawson is one of the most devoted fathers I ever knew." "How so?" "He's so proud of his children. Why, say, he often lies awake half the night trying to think up clever things that he can credit them with saying."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Juvenile Idea.

"Willie, do you know what happens to the bad little boys?" "Sure." "What?" "They have more fun than the good little boys."—Chicago Post.
