Bare Floors and Rugs.

An eminent physician who has made a study of the germ theory is credited with saying that "when the American housewife becomes thoroughly educated in domestic sanitation she will never have a carpet in her home." No matter with what care folks enter a house they are bound to carry some dirt with them from the street. This settles into the carpet, and each time sweeping day comes around it is stirred up and the air of the room is filled with it. The chances are that such air is most unwholesome. Bare, clean floors and rugs are more wholesome.-Chicago
