The Country Newspaper.

There is probably no auxiliary to an advanced civilization so little appreci ated by the communities served by it as is the country newspaper.

Go to any small town and ask to be directed to the newspaper office, and in many cases along with the information sought will be the volunteered remark that the paper "don't amount to much," or "it never has anything in it."

And yet this same paper is watched for by every resident of the place to learn what has happened in the community since its last issue, and what is going to happen in the future-for the editor is expected to know what the stranger in town last week was in town next week and what he is going to do.

In every instance, no matter whether the paper is Republican or Democrat, our representatives have been treated with the greatest courtesy and freely furnished with all the justly proud of its new power. information at the command of the editor. Of all the newspapeas of the state no class is doing more in proportion to its resources and opportunities in promoting the development of the separate localities and the state as a whole than the country weeklies If you cannot afford to take your home paper and the Cheftain, too, take your home paper and borrow the Chieftain of the editor. Fine New Engines. What a contrast between the locomotive of today and that of even ten years ago. This contrast is not only observable by railroad men, but by the general public. The fine type of powerful locomotives now in use on many railroads is really one of the wonders of the day and among the chiefest locomotive marvels are the new consolidation freight engines of the Detroit & Mackinac railroad that have just been constructed by the American Locomotive Co., Schenectady, N. Y., and which for power and speed cannot be excelled by anything in the motive power line. Some idea of these huge machines may be obtained from the following dimensions: Cylinders 21 inches in diameter, with 26 inch stroke; eight | driving wheels 51 inches in diameter with a total wheel base of 32 feet, 3 inches; diameter of boiler at smokebox 743 inches, with 376 flues 2 inches in diameter, the steam pressure being 200 pounds to the square inch; firebox heating surface covers 3123 square feet and the flues an additional 2,560 square feet making the total heating surface, 2,7723 square feet, the grate area being 341 square feet; tender ca pacity 6,000 gallons of water and eleven tons of coal; weight on driving wheels 151,000 pounds; total weight without tender 168,000 pounds; total weight with loaded tender 288,000 there for, and what stranger will be pounds or 144 tons. Congressman Who Can Wrestle, The Hon. Bird S. McGuire, Oklahoma's new delegate to congress, was not only one of the nerviest cowboys and broncho busters on the plains before he became a lawyer, but in his early days he made a reputation also as a wrestler which still sticks. There would not be much difficulty now in persuading him to participate in a bout provided it could be done so secretly as not to interfere with the dignity essential to his congressional position.

In 1884, when young McGuire was a student at the State Normal at Emporia, Kan., he was in the height of his athletic glory. He could throw and outbox everybody in school, including his roommate, the now governor of Oklahoma, the Hon. Tom B. Ferguson. He practiced this sport for several years after he left school and soon became known as the best man in Chautauqua county and in all southeastern Kansas.

In 1886 McGuire met and defeated at the county fair at Sedan, Kan., a professional wrestler of the name of Weber. McGuire acquired great fame from this encounter and afterward received challenges from professionals throughout the land. The notoriety of it impelled him to give up wrestling.

The bill referred to by Mr. Coekran was introduced by King Edward himself, and it is thought that the influence of the brilliant Irish-American visitor upon those high in English counsels had something to do with the adoption of the measure. While enthusiastic over the benefits which will accrue to the Irish people through the new land bill, Mr. Cockran modestly denies that he had a share in securing its adoption.

A Smiling Magnate.

David Wilcox, the railway magnate and lawyer, has always been noted for his urbanity, and from time to time he indulges himself and his colleagues in a little philosophizing on the value of the "smile that won't come off."

Like other big railway presidents, he has a pass over the New York elevated system. While entering through the Fifty-eighth street station recently a companion noticed that he lightly touched the brim of his hat and nodded in his wonted smiling way to the gateman "Your smile seems as irresistible with ticket choppers as it is with rail road directors, and as it used to be with juries," observed a friend.

"Let me tell you," was the reply, "that I'd have to show my pass to that

How It is Done.

The great railroad corporations o the state claim to be over-taxed. They are not paying the taxes assessed against them, but only what they insist is right, allowing the balance to accumulate, and the whole subject is indefinitely tied up in the courts.

Meanwhile a local street railway corporation, which is trying to uphold in the market a great volume of watered stock, is very solicitous that the hands of the people of the city of Detroit should be tied so that they may be powerless to prevent the extension of its franchises when they shortly expire.

Other private and corporate interests, in and out of the state, also have taxes to grind with our state government, and it is all-important to all these interests that public officials, and especially legislators, shall be nominated and elected who will not be unfavorable to their claims.

They can well afford to expend large sums in securing friends in the legislature, and as a matter of fact they do spend money with a free hand. Already they have experienced agents going over the state selecting acceptable persons whom to nominate. They generally choose men of good standing in their communities, whom no one would suspect of want of fidelity to the public interests. They will approach an individual of this class with the suggestion that the lights of the party would be pleased to have him come forward as a canditate. This flatters the man who has never held public office, but he pleads that he cannot leave his business, even for a few months, and in fact that he cannot afford to make the sacrifice that the office would require.

"Never mind that," will be the reand so he accepts. A thousand dollars would be a very cheap price at which to secure a state senator friendly to a particular private interest. Money in abundance is forth coming for the employment of active local politicians to work up the selected man's candidacy, and in due time he is nominated by a packed convention. Nomination of a reputable republican in this state means in most cases his election.

The candidate knows that some interest is securing his nomination and election. He would not be human if he did not deal tenderly with any matters which might affect that interest. He has made no direct promises, but he is under obligations which as a man he cannot repudiate. He is inevitably the servant of the interests whatever they may be, which procured his election, and not thoroughy and unreservedly that of his constituents.

In this way the control of every successive legislature is stolen away from the people. The work is done so quietly that the voters never suspect that they are being hoodwinked nto the support of a man who is in the toils of private interests, and by so much must necessarily be a traitor to the state, and to the constituency which elected him, whenever anydealt with.

The great remedy for this will be a primary election law which will make it impossible for any private interest ates.

The only honorable and safe posply, "we will see that whatever sacri- ition for any canditate to assume will fice shall be made up to you, directly be to refuse financial help from anyor indirectly." But the individual one. The men who do this will dedoubts if he can be nominated. serve and enjoy the public confidence "Leave that to us," will be the reply, and support. - Evening News.

The facts are simply these: It is being demonstrated every day in all parts of the country that those who have received special instruction along the line of the work in which they are engaged are succeeding very much better than those who have not received such instruction, and hence very many who are ambitious, and every body should be, are losing no time in arranging to receive instruction.
