There are no less than three former secretaries of war. Proctor served under Harrison twelve years ago, and he was succeeded by Elkins, who is now a senator from West Virginia. Alger was McKinley's first secretary of war. Teller was a Republican secretary of the interior away back in Arthur's time. There are a number of senators who might have been cabinet officers if they would have consented to it. Allison has declined the secretaryship of the treasury at least three times from as many different presidents. Aldrich declined the same position when McKinley came in. Chauncey M. Depew could have been secretary of state under Harrison during the last few months of the latter's administration after the resignation of Blaine. Senator Hoar has been invited into the cabinet, besides being invited to be ambassador to Great Britain. John C. He also declined the chairmanship of the national committee in the second Harrison campaign.
