For fifty years the Clothcrafters have been building good clothes.

No other manufacturer in America has been at it so long and for so many reasons. No other maker produces clothes of equal merit at equal prices.

The Clothcraft principle has always been to turn out the very best irrespective of cost and then to add merely a legitimate manufacturing profit. Whatever is saved in buying cloth, or in improving methods of making, is taken out of the price. The Clothcrafters are clothing manufacturers and not speculators—they try to make the same percentage of profit on every garment sold.

Every garment is guaranteed. The guarantee is put into every suit and overcoat. It is a definite contract backed by a house fifty years old, with ample capital and a reputation in the trade that makes its every word worth par.

Clothcraft Clothes are guaranteed to give you greater value in style, fit, finish and wear than you can get in any other clothes at the same price.

STYLE is what first interests the buyer and WEAR is what makes him a steady customer. You will find full measure of both—in Clothcraft.

CHAPTER XII.

It is not very difficult to decide whether a crop of soy beans for instance, has nodules on its roots or not since the nodules may be as large as garden peas. On clover and alfalfa they are about as large as pin heads, on peas, much larger. Examine the roots of every leguminous crop on the farm and if the nodules are absent, take proper means to inoculate the seed or soil before planting again.

The sources of this inoculation are many. On the seed of soy beans and cowpeas there is usually some dirt containing these germs. Sow either of these crops for two consecutive years on the same piece of ground and the soil will usually be inoculated.

This is seldom true of clover and alfalfa. For them, and indeed for all legumes, it is safer either to get earth from a field that has borne the particular crop with roots well covered with nodules or to get nitro cultures, as they are called, either from the government or from some commercial source. It seems to be particularly unfortunate that no farm crops other than the legumes, neither wheat, corn, barley nor oats, can thus feed, even indirectly upon the nitrogen of the air. They must find their supply of nitrogen in the soil itself.

The bulk of the nitrogen in the soil is formed in the humus, the partly decayed and still rotting organic matter. We have noted that this decaying organic matter, this humus, aided in increasing the waterholding capacity of the soil. We now come to study it as a source of nitrogen for the crops.

In a former chapter it has been noted that humus forms in soils of fine particles, when the texture is close and when the supply of air and therefore of oxygen, is limited; where there is plenty of water, but not too great excess; and also where the temperature is moderate and where the supply of vegetable matter is sufficient. They decay of the vegetable matter must be very slow and this slowness depends on the partial exclusion of air.

The formation of humus is checked and its destruction hurried by growing hoed crops. Corn, beets and potatoes decrease the amount of humus in soils because they leave the surface uncovered by vegetation and by constant cultivation, introduce plenty of air into the soil. For this reason two cultivated crops should not succeed each other but a drilled cereal and a legume should intervene, that opportunity for restoration of humus may be given. Barnyard manure should be applied or some green manuring crop, if possible a legume, should be plowed under at least once in four years, to furnish the material out of which the humus is formed.

Crops can feed upon neither freshly applied barnyard manure nor the bodies of plants plowed under until these materials have been acted upon by ferments and have decayed. This organic matter should therefore lie in the soil undergoing slow decomposition, and should form the reservoir of humus from which the farmer can draw as the crops need.

The process of nitrification is the rapid decay of humus and the conversion of its nitrogen content into nitrates fit for the use of plants. Where manure, for instance, has been spread on clover sod and plowed under for corn the following spring, there is a large amount of decaying organic matter added to the soil, but this organic matter is almost totally insoluble and hence useless to plants.

As the corn crop is cultivated the conditions are supplied for the rapid change of the nitrogen in this rotting vegetable matter into nitrates. These conditions are:—heat, temperature, from 85° F. to 95° F. being the best; moisture; darkness; the presence of lime or some other alkali and finally aeration of the soil brought about by cultivation. In this way the corn crop, a grass feeder, has its appetite for nitrates supplied and in September there is a maximum amount of nitrates ready for the wheat crop to follow the corn and to be sown in that month. Remember that the nitrates are all very soluble hence a corn field should never be left bare all winter.

Rather arrange the rotation of crops to let fall wheat follow corn, without plowing, or sow some other crop in September or late August, that will fill the soil through the fall and winter with roots to take up these soluble nitrates or they may be lost in the drainage waters. Experiments without number have shown that where the soil is fertile, nitrates are thus formed in the hot summer weather and possibly carried away by the fall rain. Another way in which they may be lost is through the upper surface of the ground. Suppose the cultivation of a field to be neglected after a heavy thunder shower in July, a crust forms, evaporation from the surface is rapid, the water thus brings up much nitrate from below and, on evaporation, leaves it at the very top of the crust, another heavy shower follows in a few days, so much water falling that it runs off instead of soaking into the crust covered soil. This water carries away with it the mineral matters and the nitrates which the evaporating water had brought to the surface after the previous shower. Thus does the lack of cultivation rob the soil, not alone of moisture, but of nitrates and other soluble plant foods as well. The remedy is to break up the crusts on the corn and potato fields the orchards and gardens as soon after each summer shower as the land is dry enough to permit.

The total quantity of nitrogen in ordinary soils, according to Professor King, is, in per cent, between .014 and .308 and in pounds per acre, 3,015 lbs. in the upper nine inches, quoting from the work at Rothamstead, England; or as high as 16 tons per acre, one foot deep on the rich soils near Winnipeg.

Last Hope Vanished.

When leading physicians said that W. M. Smithart, of Pekin, Ill., had incurable consumption, his last hope vanished, but Dr. King's New Discovery for consumption, coughs and colds, kept him out of his grave. He says: "This great specific completely cured me, and saved my life. Since then, I have used it for over 10 years and consider it an excellent throat and lung cure." Strictly scientific cure for coughs and colds; sure preventative of pneumonia. Guaranteed 50c and $1.00 bottles at G. S. Darling and J. E. Dillon's drug store. Trial bottle free.

Farmers' Picnic August 23.

The officers of the Ioseco County Farmers' Institute Society met last Saturday to consider plans for the coming year. It was decided to hold a Harvest picnic at Sand Lake, on Wednesday, August 23. Arrangements are to be made for a state speaker, and the occasion will not only be a day of recreation but of profit to every farmer, his wife and children.

The officers also propose to make the institute next winter the best ever held. It is their object to interest not only the old but the young, and to this end they have decided to offer the following prizes for corn grown in this county this year viz:

For the best one dozen ears of white corn, $1.50, second best $1.00, third best 50 cents.

For the best one dozen ears yellow corn, $1.50, second best $1.00, third best 50 cents.

It is to be hoped that our farmers will develop a greater interest in the institute in the future than has been shown for the past two or three years, and that all will join in making not only the picnic but next winter's institute a success.

Failed to Advertise.

The Indianapolis News chronicles the dissolution of a dry goods firm at Marion, Ind., which for seventeen years had maintained an up-hill fight against modern business methods, only to be beaten at last. The firm in question had the best site in the town and hosts of friends; and when its field was invaded by other houses that advertised, it refused to "throw its money away for newspaper space." Gradually the new stores won the patronage of the old one, new customers failed to appear to take the place of the deserters, and the firm that tried to get along without advertising has finally relinquished its business. Which demonstrates again that advertising is not a luxury, but a necessity.

A Visit to the Mines.

We boarded the Home-seekers train of the Rock Island railroad, at Chicago on Tuesday evening at 10 o'clock on our way to the famous gold camp of Cripple Creek, Col. It was about 11 o'clock before we were stowed comfortably away in our berth. About 2 o'clock next morning I was awakened by a noise outside and found the train standing still. I shoved up my window, stuck out my head and saw right across the track a large shed filled with electric cars, I called to a switchman standing near, asking what place it was, just then a female voice across aisle, exclaimed "What in the dickens does that man want to know place this is for?" the switchman answered and said it was Rock Island. For fear that my enraged female passenger might alight upon me with her shoe, I silently motioned the switchman to come nearer, then I asked him in a subdued whisper "How wide is the Mississippi river at this place?" He said "about one mile across the island to Davenport, in Iowa," then I silently drew in my head, softly let down my window and dozed off to sleep again. During the night we passed through West Liberty, Iowa City, and Brooklyn arriving at Des Moines about 8:30 a. m. Previous to this we had breakfasted in the dining car attached to the train, after a stop of about 10 minutes our train sped on for Council Bluffs where we arrived at 12:55 p. m., here our train was transferred to the U. P. R. across the Missouri River to Omaha. The bridge over which we crossed was about 75 feet high and 1/4 of a mile long. After a wait of about 30 minutes in Omaha our train pulled out to the northwest for about five miles, then swung around to the southwest, crossing the Elk Horn river it continued in a southwesterly course for thirty miles, where we crossed the Platte river which is about 1/2 mile wide.

We arrived at Lincoln, Neb., about 5 p. m., two hours late. The surface of the prairie in Iowa and eastern Nebraska is like what the sailors on the Gulf of Mexico used to call a "choppy sea" and not like the formation of western Kansas which is like the long rolling swells of the Atlantic. I noticed one peculiarity here in the west, that is the inhabitant are clustered together in little towns and villages and not dispersed over the country like the farmers are in the east. The farm buildings seem to be from two to five and ten miles apart, indicating that the land is held in large tracts; but enough of this. After a ten minute stop, we started on our way again and after an all night ride we arrived at Lyman, Col., about 9 o'clock, four hours late, where we got breakfast in an old passenger coach standing on a side track, which had been rigged over for a dining room, as the dining car attached to our train had been dropped off during the night. Here is the junction of the Denver and Colorado Springs roads. After breakfast we boarded the train for Colorado Springs where we arrived at 12:40 p. m., 1072 miles southwest of Chicago.

It is conceded that Colorado Springs and Pikes Peak regions which is tributary to it, contains a greater number and variety of scenic wonders than can be found in any equal area in the world. Pikes Peak is unrivalled among American mountains, it has a more prominent place in the history of the exploration and occupation of the great west than any other name. It is fitting that this great mountain should bear the name of him who first described it to the English speaking people, Zebulon M. Pike. On Nov. 13, 1806, Major Pike first discovered this mountain; after sighting it he traveled ten days before arriving at its base. Nov. 27, Dr. Robinson and privates Miller and Brown attempted its ascent and failed. It was in 1819 that the first white man ever gained the summit, on July 13 of that year Dr. Edwin James and three unknown men with a volunteer named Harris started to make the ascent which they accomplished about 4 o'clock in the afternoon of the 14th. The first woman to stand on its summit was Mrs. James H. Holmes who reached the top on Aug. 5, 1858.

After taking dinner at Colorado Springs we took the Midland R. R. for Cripple Creek. This road passes around the north side of Pikes Peak, going through Colorado City, Manitou, Cameron, Independence and Victor. We arrived at Cripple Creek about 8 o'clock p. m. and we had a hard time finding lodgings as the hotels were all full, but finally secured a bed on the fourth floor of the National hotel, which is run on the European plan, and they charged us $1.00 each for the use of a bed. In the morning we got a good breakfast across the street for 25 cents. The city of Cripple Creek is situated in what is known as poverty gulch, and contains about 10,000 inhabitants. It is entered by three different railroads, it has two separate lines of electric cars known as the High line and Low line, the High line division runs between Cripple Creek and Victor via Midway, Independence and Goldfield, twisting and turning in its ascent of the famous Bull Hill, reaching an altitude of 10,000 feet, from here looking west, above the clouds is the glistening crest of the Sangre de Cristo range of mountains, spreading out its sheet of perpetual snow. In this range are to be seen Buffalo, Blanca, Ouray, Harvard, Yale, Princeton, Holy Cross and Elba peaks, varying in distance from 60 to 150 miles.

Few men comparatively know the sensation of looking from a mountain top over hundreds of miles of the earth's surface. To those who have realized this feeling it affords an indelible recollection, one of the cherished experiences of a life time. From here we coasted down the hill to Independence. Here I saw the depot that was blown up last year, during the miners strike, some say it was done by the miners and others were just as positive that it was done at the instigation of the Citizens Alliance. The depot stands in the same condition that the explosion left it. From here we went on down the hill to Goldfield, where I saw the marks of the bullets in the bricks of the building where the union miners were gathered when they were fired upon by the soldiers. I was told there was not a union miner employed at the present time anywhere in this mining district; also that it was impossible for a miner to secure employment in the district without a card from the mine owners union, although the said union is operated under the name of the Citizens Alliance and is backed up by the whole militia force of the state. We left the electric cars here and climbed up Beacon Hill to one of the mines where they were tearing out their old machinery and putting in new, up-to-date machinery in its place. The president of the mining company, E. A. Norton, chanced to be at the mine. He appears to be a wholesome energetic and progressive business man, one who is worthy of the confidence of any man; it was through his courtesy that we were permitted to go down the shaft that has been blasted through solid granite to the depth of 400 feet where we explored the different tunnels and witnessed the drilling of the rock with machinery run by compressed air, this was an experience never to be forgotten.

Oh! by the way, it was here that I heard a good joke on Nick; before descending into the mines each man is furnished with a sperm candle to light up the darkness of the depths below, when Nick was offered one he said, "I don't want that, I am coming out of that hole before dark."

Ore is being broken and taken out through 200 openings, shafts and tunnels, by one or more operators in this district. We took the steam car for Cripple Creek and we had the pleasure of Mr. Norton's company as he lives in Cripple Creek and has an interest in the city mine, and by chance his wife was in the office and he gave us an introduction to her and she appears to be a noble woman having all the grace and dignity of a highly educated and finished lady. When she talks of mines and mining her eyes sparkle and flash, rivaling the brilliancy of the solitaire diamond pin at her throat. She kindly invited us up to dinner. After a thorough inspection of the city mine which is one of the best equipped mines in the district, we began our climb up the mountain with Mr. Norton to his home, where we were received by Mrs. Norton with a smiling face, after partaking of a sumptuous repast, and the passing of a pleasant hour we bade our charming hostess good bye. As I stood upon the stoop I looked across the street and saw that we were exactly on a level with the chimney top of the house on the opposite side. The next morning we boarded the train on the Colorado Springs & Cripple Creek R. R. for our return journey. This road passes around the south side of Pikes Peak and over the top of Cheyenne mountain and is 45 miles in length, it represents an expenditure of four and one half million dollars, undoubtedly the most costly road in the west, according to mileage. Some railroads boast of a single horse shoe curve, but this road has them by the score, single and double forming the letter S and loops of all kinds, spanning the canons and twisting around the mountains. Between St. Peters and Duffield you travel over three miles by rail to gain a distance of 1600 feet and an elevation of 540 feet, there are nine tunnels on this line, the longest is 530 feet. West of Duffield you can see the east end of tunnel seven and the west end of tunnel eight making a complete loop of the mountains. Point Sublime is a spot most appropriately named for no term could better describe the view, which here bursts upon the vision. The charming suburb of Broadmore is at our feet; Colorado Springs lies to the northeast and an excellent idea of the city may be obtained. Way beyond, stretches the rolling plains, dotted here and there with lakes glistening in the sunlight. The panorama is one of incomparable magnificence, mere measurements seem altogether meaningless. What Niagara is to waterfalls, such is Point Sublime to scenery. The observer is 7200 feet above the sea level and 1200 feet higher than the plains. A trip over the short line from Cripple Creek to Colorado Springs put a new meaning to me to the words beauty, sublimity and grandeur and has left in my mind a glowing picture in yellow and reds of mighty canons, lofty crags and mountain peaks that will remain while memory lasts a joy forever.

Mr. Editor if you ever want to view nature in all her beauty, grandeur and loveliness I would advise you to take your wife to Colorado Springs and spend a week visiting the scenery around Pikes Peak.

Respectfully,
E. V. ESMOND.

ALABASTINE YOUR WALLS!

The most desirable thing in wall covering is opacity (covering power.) Next to that is ease of application. In both of these Alabastine stands pre-eminent. Then there are other points—the firmness, the permanence, the binding qualities, and it is mixed with clear, pure water. Alabastine is not dependent on sour paste nor smelly glue to bind it to the wall, it is an Alabaster cement that sets on the wall. It is the purest, the nicest, the best wall covering made. The most beautiful color effects, the most beautiful color schemes, the most beautiful designs are possible with Alabastine.

Alabastine is specially suitable for church and school house work. Write us for color ideas for such work.
