The census bureau has issued a bulletin stating that one-tenth of the people in the United States over 9 years old are illiterate persons. Those unable to read or write English or any other language are classed illiterate. This does include non contingent territory.

The Michigan State Grange meets next month and one of the principal things to be discussed will be the primary reform law passed by the last legislature. The executive committee has had attorneys of prominence examine the law and believe that it is unconstitutional. At any rate the law is unsatisfactory to leading Grangers.

The best way any local merchants can fight the mail order houses is to advertise. That's the method they use to get the business. Local goods and prices are just as good and in most instances better than those of outside concerns, but there is no satisfactory way for people to find this out unless told about it in a paper which goes into the homes of the community.

It has been proposed that the graduating classes in all departments at the University of Michigan unite this year in a project for leaving some appropriate memorial on the Campus. By this means it is expected that a more useful and more creditable memorial can be decided upon than the unrelated efforts of the different classes have yet furnished.

According to the statistical report of the lake commerce through the St. Marias ship canal for November the amount of freight traffic reached 5,006,543 net tons a slight increase over the same month last year. The total net tonnage for the season up to the first of December was 43,000,173, as against 30,271,241 for the same period last year. In round numbers the traffic by the close of navigation will probably reach nearly 44,000,000 net tons. This will be 8,000,000 tons bigger than the record season.

Physicians are charged with a new duty under an act of the last legislature in regard to filing certificates of births with township, village and city clerks. The act takes effect on January 1, 1906. Under the old law births were enumerated by assessors and supervisors once a year, which proved to be a very imperfect and inaccurate way. When filed promptly within ten days after birth, the returns should be complete and reliable. Blanks and instructions have been mailed to all physicians in the state by the Secretary of State, Lansing, who has charge of this matter.

Fortune Hunting.
From a sheet of blank paper cut a large picture of a witch, with a cat just in front of her, mounted on a broomstick. Have this figure pinned to the center of a sheet which is to hang at one end of the room. Have written on slips of paper (as many as there are guests) some clever fortunes, in rhyme, and place them in small envelopes. Pin these promiscuously over the sheet, placing those promising the brightest future nearest the witch. When all is ready let each guest in turn be blindfolded, turned about several times and allowed to seek and find his fortune by touching the sheet with the end of a small broomstick. The envelope nearest the point he touches will be his.

Do not remove the envelope until everybody has finished, but pin each one's name (written on a slip of paper) to the spot where he touches the sheet, to keep tally. The fortunes may be made more desirable as souvenirs by decorating the papers with small silhouettes of witches, black cats, etc. If prizes are given let the one who secures the fortune which is placed in the witch's outstretched hand receive an appropriate volume.

A Library Party.
To give a library party would be great enjoyment for your friends, and it is suitable for any occasion. The game is as follows:

First, you should supply each guest with a paper, and on it have numbers from 1 to 40. Pencils must be provided also. Then two people (usually the hostess and her friend) will act, as in charades, the title of some popular book. Your guests will try to guess the name of the book which has just been acted. Then a person, who will stand near with a watch, will give them just three minutes' time to guess and write it down, and after twenty books have been acted the guests will hand their papers in, with their names on them, and the girl or boy who has been able to guess the titles or the nearest to them will receive a fine prize, while the one who has the least will receive the booby prize.

A Good Parlor Trick.
After you have your audience ready, you step to the front and say, "Ladies and gentlemen, if there is any one in this audience who would like to know the name of his future wife, if that young man will kindly stand up I will undertake to tell him."

Then, pointing to a young man in the center of the room, you say, "You, sir; I'm sure you'd like to know, but as I like to do business in a proper, business fashion, I will be obliged to you if you will tell me your name."

Then after the person tells his name—for instance, James Jones—you bow politely and say: "Thank you. Your future wife's name will be Mrs. Jones."

Royal Perfumes.
Queen Alexandra of Great Britain uses heliotrope on her hair.
The queen of Portugal scents her hair with violets. Her hair is brilliantly glossy and always arranged in the height of the mode.
Queen Christina of Spain and the young king's sisters perfume their hair with a Spanish extract that is much like rose.
Queen Wilhelmina also likes rose. Her hair is sprinkled and washed with rose water daily, and several quarts of cologne are used in her morning bath.
Queen Elizabeth perfumed her wigs with Spanish leather steeped in musk.

The Five Vowels.
The company are arranged in a circle and question each other alternately. The answer must be as brief as possible, suitable and prompt; otherwise a forfeit is paid. The game begins in this way: The first player turns to the player on her right and asks: "Charles, do you like dumplings? Answer without an 'A.'" And Charles replies, "Yes, I like them ever so much," and then in his turn addresses the player on his other side: "Are you fond of riding, Kitty? Answer without an 'E.'" Kitty will reply, "I love it," or something equivalent, and pays a forfeit. Thus the game proceeds.

Cat and Mouse.
In cat and mouse a circle is formed and a player stands within as the mouse. Another player—the cat—stands outside. The object of the game is for the cat to catch the mouse. The circle assists the mouse by letting her out of the circle at any time, but the cat is hindered as much as possible, tightly clasped hands forming the obstacle. When the game is well learned much interest can be added by having two cats and one mouse.

The Wreck of the Fast Express.
The train left Milk Fall station
A little after four
And choo-chooed out at frightful speed
Across the kitchen floor.
It swerved and curved and tooted
And rattled up and down;
The engineer then waved his hand
And stopped at Stove Leg town.
They backed to Wood Box corner
For passengers, and then
They got a new conductor
And scooted off again.
The train was overloaded;
It puffed and tugged and roared
And backed and reared the steep ascent
Of mother's ironing board.
It turned, but something happened!
The brakeman gave a yell:
"Get off the track! Get off the track!"
Then rang the dinner bell.
But headlong dashed the engine,
On, on across the mat,
Down underneath the cradle
And struck the gingham cat!
You never heard such racket
As followed in the crash.
I only know the baby wept
And I thought I went all to smash.
—Her head was all in Buffalo Express.

PEOPLE OF THE DAY

Advocate of Business Morality.
Rev. Dr. Washington Gladden, whose recent denunciation of taint money raised a warm controversy in church circles, is of the opinion that predatory wealth is a grave menace to the country's future welfare. In a recent address he said:

"Predatory wealth is wealth which has been gained by plunder rather than by legitimate commerce and which is used to promote the facilities of plunder. It has not been won in open and honorable competition, but by getting unfair and generally unlawful advantages, by secret agreements and rebates, by the manipulation of railway and government officials, by the ill-eral use of money to influence legislation and subsidize the press, by using trust funds for private purposes, by arts which corrupt character and destroy the foundations of social order.

"With respect to predatory wealth, then, the function of the moral teachers is clear. It is their business to testify against it, to arouse the conscience of the nation to resist its encroachments."

Dr. Gladden is the moderator of the Congregational church in America and is a voluminous writer on religious and social reform topics, especially the latter. He is a native of Pennsylvania, a graduate of Williams college and is sixty-nine years old. Since 1882 he has been pastor of the First Congregational church at Columbus, O. Before that he held several pastorate and editorial positions.

While Dr. Gladden has been concerned with the serious problems of life, he is not wholly devoid of humor, as the following shows:

On one occasion he was attacking certain unfortunate tendencies of modern finance.

"A modern financier of this type," he said humorously, "was robbed in Broadway the other day. A little urchin in sorry rags slipped up behind him and snatched his handkerchief from his pocket.

"Some one grabbed the boy—caught him red handed. A crowd collected. A man said:

"I will run for the police."
"But the financier fixed a not unkindly look upon the trembling little culprit.

"Oh, let him alone," he said. "I began business in a small way myself."

Antisulicide Commission.
To stay the hands of the self destroyers and to render all possible aid to the despondent is the object of the antisulicide commission recently appointed by Mayor Tom L. Johnson of Cleveland.

"It is the grandest work ever attempted here," said Mayor Johnson. "The commission's primary object is to prevent suicide. Suicides and attempted suicides are not always proof of insanity, though the fact of self destruction always suggests it.

"Of the eighty-six suicides in Cleveland during the first nine months of 1905 the one word despondency is the key word of all. Hard drinking, lack of work, sickness, domestic trouble cause men to commit suicide. Sickness, domestic trouble, lives of shame cause women to end life. The records show that the latter cause is the most frequent in the case of women. In nearly every case the kind word of a friend or helper would have prevented self destruction."

Mayor Tom L. Johnson is a native of Kentucky and is in his fifty-second year. He received a common school education and began his business career at the age of fifteen. His success was marvelous, and a few years ago he retired a millionaire many times over. Before his first election to the mayoralty of Cleveland in 1901 he had served two terms in congress.

SHIPRIGGERS' PERILS

A BUSINESS THAT DEMANDS GREAT SKILL AND COURAGE.

Twenty Per Cent of the Men Regularly Following This Calling Are Maimed Every Year—How They Learn the Dangerous Trade.

A skillful ship rigger never strikes. Come good times or bad, the supply of volunteers for this most desperate of occupations never falls below the demand. The ship riggers are to be seen along the water fronts of all great ports perched high in air, like great spiders busied with their strange architecture. They work in all sorts of weather, both by day and night. No other calling demands such a combination of skill and courage and the ability to work quickly in the face often of appalling danger.

There is no exaggeration in the statement that the rigging of ships, especially those requiring repairs after long service, is the most dangerous of occupations.

According to reliable statistics, fully 20 per cent of all regularly employed ship riggers are maimed, often very seriously, every year. The proportion of riggers seriously injured in a lifetime is about 90 per cent. The greater number of accidents are caused by falls from aloft or by being struck by falling objects, such as blocks or spars or pieces of heavy rigging, falling from great heights. Serious knife wounds come next in order. The records of such accidents, as evidenced by the books of any hospital in a great seaport, are long and gresome.

A rigger must be a steeple climber, a sailor, a tight rope walker, something of a trapeze artist and an experienced shipbuilder rolled into one. He must be literally a jack of all trades and a master at least of several of them. The ironworker who balances himself on steel girders on a great bridge or skyscraper, the trapeze artist in the circus or the "steeplejack" actually works in far less danger of his life.

The danger to the latter class of workers is more familiar and has been the more widely advertised. But a ship rigger must keep a perfectly cool head in the face of dangers which might stagger a Nelson or a Dewey. Your "steeplejack" may be perfectly self possessed at high altitudes, but then he works with the assurance that his support at least is stable. The structural iron worker feels that he can depend upon the solidity of the steel beams beneath him, while the most daring trapeze performer never ventures on ropes which have not been thoroughly tested and rarely without a net beneath him.

But the rigger knows no such safety in his support. The fact that his services are required aloft means, of course, that the complicated rigging is faulty. The masts or spars may be rotten to the breaking point, the ropes may part at any instant. It is just this uncertainty which renders the rigger's life extra hazardous. He must mount with the agility of a cat and work quickly in a network of rigging which may part at any instant. It would be different if he could even choose his own time and weather, but the rush inseparable from such work allows him no choice. Rain or snow or ice greatly increases the danger by rendering the spars or ropes treacherous to the hand and foot. Then, again, when the work goes forward by night the blinding rays of the searchlight to a man delicately balanced on icy ropes make it extremely difficult to judge distances and positions.

The most experienced sailor, no matter how much at home he may feel in the rigging in any weather, will often balk at the work of the rigger. The sailor is at least reasonably sure of the strength of his rigging if his ship be seaworthy. Then, again, if a sailor slips or falls the rolling of his ship is likely to throw him overboard into the water, where his fall is partly broken. It is different with the rigger, who if he falls must come down on the bare boards. The ship rigger must, besides, often work with the masts and spars practically denuded of their rigging without the safety which a full rigged ship lends to an experienced sailor.

The wages of the skilled ship rigger may seem high in comparison with those of the ordinary sailor or even a ship's officer. Considering the accidents which every rigger meets in his daily life, the work is of course one for which no amount of money can really compensate. A first class rigger commonly receives $4 for a day's work. For all extra time the rate is double. Much of the work is of course done under the usual pressure of time. When an accident occurs to a merchant ship, for example, which is due perhaps with a perishable cargo at some distant port, every hour economized in making repairs counts against serious loss. A great part of the work of rigging is therefore done at night, the gangs of riggers relieving one another continuously until the ship is again ready for sea.

The ship rigger whose experience or skill does not enable him to do the most important work earns from $3 to $3.50 a day, with the same agreement for overtime. During the busy season in the great seaport towns it is not uncommon for the riggers to work continuously for from fourteen to sixteen hours a day. As a result it is not unusual for them to receive for months at a time as much as $50 a week.

In nearly all great seaport towns, notably in New York city, the riggers are strongly organized. Their union is probably the oldest of its kind in the world. Not only have they played an important part throughout the history of American shipping, but their guild was an effective one in London when
