A newspaper is about the only institution that does not seem to weary in well doing. It's a pretty poor sheet that doesn't boost its home town, its home people and its home interests in every issue, and it is a mighty lucky sheet that isn't knocked for its pains.

Read the announcements of your merchants in this issue. Many a dollar has been saved by a careful perusal of a merchant's ad. When a business man advertises for your patronage he not only has a line of goods that "speaks" but there may be some article or articles listed that you desire and that it may be advantageous to buy at this time.

No town will become a good business center as long as its business men rely on a few merchants to make the effort to bring trade to town. Too often the men in a few lines of trade are about the only ones that reach out after custom. Other merchants wait until these men induce the people to come to town and content themselves with trade that naturally drifts to their place. A public spirited man should ask himself if he is doing his part to attract people to come to town to trade in helping the entire business community, and no town is a success unless all lines are working to extend the trade as far as possible and trying to bring a larger territory in the circles in which the town is the business center.

Enough to Damn the Party that Passed it.

The politicians who have devoted so much of energy and perverse ingenuity to incorporating needless and cumbersome requirements and restrictions into the primary law are doubtless congratulating themselves as the evidence of their success accumulates. While only 20 per cent of the certified copies of party enrollments made at the April elections have as yet been received at the secretary of state's office at Lansing, it is clear already that few, if any more than half of the voters in any party have complied with the requirements governing qualification for participation in the June primaries. Under the terms of the act the same percentage of disfranchisements will be operative in all subsequent proceedings under the primary law, and in many communities nomination by direct vote, if ordered, will be conducted by an almost insignificant majority of the citizenship.

A legal question still remains to be answered as to what will be the course of procedure in districts where vote of June 12 is against the adoption of the direct primary, or where no petitions for its adoption having been filed no referendum is had on this question. Apparently none of the provisions of the primary law would apply to consequent proceedings in such a case, and persons not enrolled under the act might take part in nominations by convention, though they would not have been entitled to vote on the question whether the primary plan should be put in operation. The attorney-general has not yet elucidated this point in the law, but it is only one of the many delightful and interesting uncertainties resulting from the desire of the machine to make the application of the law as difficult and discouraging as possible.

At Lansing, where enrollment certificates, petitions for the submission of the primary proposition and also petitions for the designation of candidates for governor and lieutenant-governor are being filed, the extent of the complications involved in execution of the law are just beginning to be realized, and members of the staff of the secretary of state are not certain whether it will be physically possible to comply with all the demands of the statute. A fresh difficulty is suggested by the discovery that not all the signers of petitions are duly qualified under the enrollment provision, and a thorough checking of the lists appears to be one of the pleasant necessities of the situation.

Another possible source of confusion and trouble is the double-headed restriction in section one of chapter three, where it is required that petitioners for submission of the primary question shall be qualified, enrolled electors and in a proviso that the percentage of petitioners to electors shall be calculated on the basis of the party vote for governor in the last preceding election. As the number of such voters can have no possible relation to the number qualified by enrollment at the election of April last the situation is a trifle mixed.

The officers charged with the administration of the law, and the citizens who have to vote under it, are certainly entitled to public sympathy, as are the city, county and state legal authorities who may reasonably expect to be kept tolerably busy between now and September considering new problems as they arise. —Detroit News.

From Washington.

Orting, April 16, 1906.
Mr. John McArdle
Dear Friend:—I landed here on Friday evening, after a visit at Spokane, with Dan, of a day and a half, and four days with Tompkins, at Marysville. Spokane is as nice a place as I have seen in a long time. It is situated in a nice warm valley, among the hills, with a beautiful river running through it, and the falls, though not very high, are something grand to look at. There are several factories on it, and still there is an enormous amount of power lost. The river is divided by an island of solid rock, and it has three shelves of about 12 or 15 feet in width, that the water runs over in a white foam. It is directly back of the Great Northern station. There are several fine steel bridges over the river, some of them are 190 feet in height. Dan says he worked on some of them, but it made me dizzy to look down over the railing. The city is a lively, clean place with plenty of work to be had on the railroads. The people seem to be very friendly and sociable.

On leaving Spokane, we went west through what they call the Big Bend country, one of the finest countries I saw on the whole route, a little rolling on the start, with nice brooks running through it, and once in a while an ugly pile of rocks. Away to the right can be seen hills or mountains. They seem to be farming some of them, dodging around some odd looking pile of rocks, that seem to be shot out of the earth by some unseen demon. As we go along the hills on the right, close in on us, but O! such a sight as meets our view on the left. A broad level prairie, as far as the eye can see, with four and six horse teams ploughing or harvesting every where you look. But the train moves fast, and the hill gets higher, and closes in on the train we are following. Here is the home of the peach and the large red apple and there is not a rod square that is not planted to one or the other of them. Land here is worth one hundred dollars per acre, and a compliment to get it at that.

But we leave all this behind and plunge into the wild Cascade mountains, and ugly looking rocks on every side, so high you cannot see the tops of them for clouds and snow. The track is cut in the side of the mountains, so high that in looking down you look through clouds. We tear along till we come to the three mile tunnel where all is darkness for about ten minutes, when we suddenly shoot out on the side of a cliff one thousand feet high, and a large hotel down below. We run up a way and make a turn in another tunnel and twist around in the mountains and in about half an hour we arrive at the hotel. Here we start down hill again at a lively speed, and soon reach Everett on the Sound. I stayed here over night, and next morning went to Marysville. Here is where I first saw the stumps. It is very nice to read about them, but a terrible reality to get rid of them. It costs from one hundred to one hundred and fifty dollars an acre to clear land in this section of the country. It is a very nice place but quite new, the early potatoes are up, and clover is about four inches high. They had a severe frost, that did considerable damage. The trees are nearly all in blossom and they are sowing their grain. The most of the people work in mills, or in the woods, or clearing off the stumps.

Friday I started for Orting, and reached Seattle at noon. Here I encountered the first sharpers I met on the route, but got out of their fingers with the loss of only one dollar and fifty cents. I reached Orting at sundown and found a pleasant little valley with two small rivers running through it. The valley is full of hop yards and fruit orchards. The blossoms are falling off the trees and the fruit setting. The hop vines are about a foot and a half long. The weather is mild and crops are as far advanced as they are around Tawas by the middle of June. Here is where the large fir and cedars grow. I paced seventeen paces around a cedar stump as close as I could get and around a standing fir sixteen paces, and an ordinary fir lying down one hundred and ninety feet long and then did not get it all. I called on Launey Fries Sunday and found them all well. This is all at present. Hoping to hear from you soon.

I remain yours truly,
DANIEL LOWE.

An Earthquake Refugee.

Sacramento, Cal., April 23, 1906.
Mr. Len Patterson,
Tawas City, Mich.

Dear Editor:—I was in Santa Rosa during the earthquake which practically reduced that city to ruin on Wednesday morning, April 18.

I was awakened at 5:12 a. m. Wednesday morning by the rattling of the windows, which I thought at first was caused by a wind storm that had come up suddenly. I soon noticed that a large wardrobe, a piece of furniture eight feet high, which was at the foot of my bed was falling toward me.

I swung my body around and laid across the head of the bed just in time to save the lower part of my body from being crushed by the falling wardrobe. Then the chimney came tumbling down, portions of which also fell on my bed. I was hit by pieces of the brick and plaster but not seriously hurt. I suffered the most from the soot and brick dust which filled my room and almost choked me.

I could see the blue sky above me through the roof in a few seconds after the earth began to tremble. We experienced slight vibrations of the earth for nearly 24 hours after the first shock. Santa Rosa was a city of 10,000 inhabitants, situated 50 miles north of San Francisco and 35 miles from the ocean. The entire business section is in ruins. To add to the horrors of the scene fires broke out in a dozen places at once, as soon as the shock was over. The fire and smoke which could be plainly seen in the direction of San Francisco, sufficiently proved to us that San Francisco had not escaped the seismic fury and was suffering the same fate as Santa Rosa. I cannot describe the heartrending scenes, which beggar description.

I left the stricken city of Santa Rosa, where I so narrowly escaped with my life, on the third day after the calamity. I still feel the swaying motion or imagine I do, which is hard to overcome and never to be forgotten.
