For a New School.

In these times when combinations and consolidation seem to be the proper thing to do to give strength and force to large business concerns, it occurs to me that the people of the two Tawases might put into practice some of these principles to the benefit of all of us.

Throughout the state in the country districts there is a general sentiment to build one central high school for each township, which gives better educational facilities for the school children of that township. This has been brought about by the state sup-Misses May and Etta White, and erintendent of public instruction at Mary Martin, of Alabaster, returned Lansing. This department has been Tuesday from a visit with relatives urging the townships to take this course for some time.

Now to get quickly at what I have to say, I have this suggestion to make to the people of the two cities: MAN, R. F. D. A Record of Four Years.

Four years ago the people of Oregon adopted a constitutional amendment providing that the people by petition of eight per cent of the electors might propose and by majority vote adopt any constitutional amendor state legislative measure.

gon have secured the following refrom governor down to alderman, except presidential electors, school cers elected to fill vacancies.

United States senators by the people, were made for the office of prosecut subject to ratification by the legis- ing attorney, but the county commit lature, just as the people's choice for tee were authorized to fill the vacan president is ratified by the electoral cy. The nominations are: college.

3. Municipal home rule, giving every city the right to frame and amend its own charter.

4. Majority rule, reserving to the people of every locality the right to control their local affairs by the inititaive and referendum.

5. The abolition of passes on railroads and street cars issued to public officials, and the prohibition of discrimination in rates of service on the part of any franchise-holding cor-

6. The right of the people of any county, precinct or combination of precincts to vote on the question of abolishing the saloon when a petition signed by 10 per cent of the electors of the locality asks to have the question submitted.

7. Greatest of all, the awakening of the people to a lively and intelligent interest in public affairs. Indifference is gone. Hopelessness is gone. The way to do things has been found.

This is the record of four years work under the initiative. It would be a good thing to try in Michigan. -Civic News.

Dirty Politics.

Politics are just as dirty as the lean and moral elements in society permits and no dirtier.

"Politics, they're too dirty for me. 'll have nothing to do with them,' says the clean business man, the unctious church man and the indifferent professional man.

"Nothing to do with them?" Did one ever hear anything so absurb? The very neglect and indifference shown by these good people is the most cordial co-operation with dirty politics. It is the support that counts. There is no assistance an officer can give a thief more potent and beneficial per se than to turn his back upon him.

The Citizen Press has heard the same old howl about dirty politics for twenty years. The good people duck for personal reasons; their business being affected, or they are too lazy and morally sluggish to be anything but negatively good. But negatively good men are in effect.

actively bad men. If every man who has a vote voted at the primaries, and if the good men would co-perate just little, there would be no dirty politics. Many a man who will wade through slush and storm to attend a church supper will not go to primary on a heavenly perfect day Their minister bewails sin and iniquity, and prays for Divine guidance when, ten to one, a large portion of the male members of his flock, who sit so vaciently during the hour of service, wink at political irregular-their hands coming in contact with their tenants. Sometimes they insist upon the agent's check instead of the actual money collected.

So long as such conditions exist there will be dirty politics, and those who are to blame are ones who stand aloof and deplore loudest the existence of said dirty politics.—Jackson Citizen Press.

A System for Keeping Young.

"Here is a summary" writes Harriet Martin in the New Idea Woman's Magazine for September, "of a number of rules that can keep the busiest. the most beautiful, the plainest, the cleverest, the stupidest woman all her life: Have a conscious determination to keep sweet mentally; a determination to use your brains, few or many as the case may be, to develop them in every possible way in order that your increasing mentality as the years pass may show in your countenance have a determination, having develop ed your brains, so to use them that your words and actions may be sensible and therefore suitable for your time of life, and that your dress may evidence a fineness of taste in keeping with your general good judgement. Having thus attended to the only part of your life over which you really have the responsibility, await events, never attempt to hurry them, remem-

The reason that so many jokes are made about woman's age lies mainly in her strong dependence on her looks. Men, vain as they are, are vain more of their strength than anything else. Strength does not fade as does womand slenderness of form. So the men getting on in years have the advantage. Just as soon as women in their looks-face and figure and dress learn how to become more, rather than less. attractive, the joke will cease."

HINTS FOR FARMERS

not be more profitable to buy pigs

Pigs and Milk. The question often arises, Would it than to raise them? It would be decidedly an advantage if the supply could be filled with any kind of certainty and of a quality that would give full compensation for labor and feed and the risk of buying infectious diseases could be eliminated. Is it not true that whoever engages in animal husbandry should become a master eventually both as breeder and feeder? If it is essential to select a good dairy cow and sire, it is no less important to select good breeding sows of robust constitution, rustlers at the feeding trough, prolific, docile (most of this last depends on ourselves in humane treatment), a good mother and milker, for like will produce like to a greater or less degree. But we are the modelers of improvement, and when we develop points by our own management we have a better guarantee that we can perpetuate them. There must be of necessity a system of breeding that will insure a supply of pigs of nearly the same age for the different seasons in order to have advantage of feeding the byproducts to the young growing pigs. There should be also proper shelter for feeding and breeding, so as to reduce labor, enhance comfort and insure full compensation for food consumed. We of the northwest ever and anon encounter zero weather and once floors and troughs and dry beds are as essential for sows and pigs as for wise except by force of his untidy master.-Cor. National Stockman and Farmer.

Willow Growing.

One of the nicest little side issues possible to a farmer who has a small stream running through his place is willow growing. There is a constant and if anything increasing demand for basket willows, and in many locations the bushes can be grown with little or no expense or trouble. Men who have gone into it, however, on a very small scale as a trial have generally found it so profitable that they have devoted some thought to its details and have become extensive willow producers.

The department of agriculture some years ago published a short pamphlet describing the best-methods of raising willows and the conditions under which ney produce the highest priced reeds. Willows will grow readily wherever the ground is at all moist. Where a man has a small flat which it would be possible for him to overflow by the construction of a cheap or temporary earth dam, requiring perhaps a day's labor with his team, it might pay him to look into the willow production business a little and see if he cannot create an additional industry for the farm without interfering with the other work. The juvenile members of some farmers' families like to try their hand at making willow ware during the winter evenings-Guy E. Mitchell in American Cultivator.

Storing Apples.

Apples should be stored in a cool, dry place, says C. B. Barrett. Warmth and moisture cause fermentation and decay. If possible, separate the overripe ones from those gathered before the riperting process was completed before putting up for the winter. The solid, unripened apples keep much longer than those which have been allowed to remain on the tree until fully ripe. But while the keeping quality of the unripened ones is desirable, the flavor is nevertheless impaired by gathering when in the best condition for long keeping. If the temperature of the cellar or house is kept even and at the right degree, there is little danger of losing even the ripest of the winter varieties until the early spring months. It would be a good plan to have some of the latest keepers that have been gathered and stored before becoming bering that thy 'fate is hurrying after too ripe reserved for use before the early crop comes.

The Hay Press.

The farmer who has more hay than barn froom will find it a good investment'to have a hay press, that he may put it into smaller bulk, so that there will be room for it in the barn instead of stacking it out of doors. It will en's charms, such as delicate beauty keep better, and if he has any to sell It will be more easily handled and sell more readily at a better price. If one cannot afford to buy a press, let those in a neighborhood who are likely to want to use it unite in owning one. The hay may be stacked until the cutting and curing is over with if one does not wish to run the press in haying time, but the quicker the stack is reduced to bales the better.

> A Pioneer In Orchard Spraying. When the time comes for erecting a monument to the pioneers in orchard spraying, Mrs. Mary Deering of Orleans county, N. Y., must not be forgotten. This lady bought a full outfit over ten years ago and gave an object lesson to many of her neighbors. Spraying is now about as common as plowing on many farms, yet twelve years ago the pioneers were trying to steer through the rocks. It is high time now to beging to give the pioneers full credit, and we shall see that Mrs. Deering has her share.-Rural New Yorker.
