Scottish Sabbath Observance.

James Payne wrote of his experience in Edinburgh, Scotland, in the seventies of the last century: "In the street where I first resided it struck me that, to judge by the drawn down blinds, the people spent a good deal of their time upon the seventh day in bed; on my second Sunday, however, I was undeceived, for my landlady came up and informed me that though she had not spoken of it last Sunday she must now draw my attention to the fact that it was not usual in Edinburgh to draw up the window blind on the Sabbath, and that the neighbors had begun to remark upon the 'unlawful appearance' of her establishment, which had heretofore been a God-fearing house."

Taft's Defense of The Tariff.

President Taft is overdoing himself on the tariff. It is conceivable that a wholly unprejudiced person might regard the recent law as an improvement over the old, but that this act, dictated by Nelson Aldrich and a composition of notorious bargaining with special interests, is a paragon of political virtue is a little too much for hard-headed Americans to swallow.

DEATH IN TERRIBLE SHAPE

One of the Most Horrible of All the Horrible Imaginings of Edgar Allan Poe.

The wife of one of the most respected citizens—a lawyer of eminence and a member of congress—was seized by a sudden and unaccountable illness which completely baffled the skill of her physicians.

The lady was deposited in her family vault, which for three years was undisturbed. At the expiration of this term it was opened for the reception of a sarcophagus; but alas; how fearful a shock awaited the husband, who personally threw open the door.

A careful investigation rendered it evident that she had revived within two days of her entombment, that her struggles within the coffin had caused it to fall from a ledge or shelf to the floor, where it was so broken as to permit her to escape.

A pleasant, good, high grade, truly flavored, amber colored cup of coffee can be had—and without the real coffee danger, or damage to health—by simply using Dr. Shoop's new substitute, called "Health Coffee."

President Taft inaugurated his western tour by clothing Senator Aldrich in a mantle of purple and gold and commending him to the emulation of the people. By the time he reached Minnesota he uttered an exaggerated tribute to a tariff act which is notoriously in bad repute—not with his partisan opponents alone, but with his political friends. What is he going to do next to strengthen the confidence of the west in his administration?—Saginaw News.

Tainted News.

Have you read in your local paper a news item telling about "the International Harvester company's welfare, work and pensions?" And have you read another declaring that the Indiana state plan for the manufacture of binding twine is a failure?

Catholic Priest in Congress.

The only Roman Catholic priest who ever was in congress was Father Gabriel Richard, who sat from a Michigan district and impressed his colleagues with his character and ability.

Chefs Share Secrets.

Cooks or chefs are seldom generous in giving away recipes for special dishes, and it is a well understood trick that the measuring of ingredients will be changed in order to bring disaster to the edible which has aroused desire.

Indigestion

Stomach trouble is but a symptom of, and not in itself a true disease. We think of Dyspepsia, Heartburn, and Indigestion as real diseases, yet they are symptoms only of a certain specific Nerve sickness—nothing else.

Looking For The Ancients.

Daniel Soper, once Wolverine secretary of state, has organized a party of archaeologists and is exploring Michigan for buried prehistoric specimens, relics and antiquities.

The possibilities of the expedition are extensive. If the party hunts around long enough it may discover the whereabouts of one Tip Atwood, one of the most interesting relics of the Bliss administration who has apparently disappeared from the face of the earth, or Charlie Ward, the lamented statesman of Baneroff. The discovery of Frank P. Glazier, the frenzied ex-state treasurer, a relic of the early Warner era, would be of great interest and while it is hunting up things if the exploration party can find any trace of the governor's ad valorem tax propaganda it will be performing a real service.

The petrified remains of Hon. Hank Smith's senatorial boom might prove interesting to students in antique politics suggests the Grand Rapids Press, and no one will doubt that the unearthing of the Detroit lid would be well worth the time. There are a whole lot of antiques buried in Michigan somewhere, including the Ivory-Dickinson primary law and the second hand binder twine plant bought by Warden Armstrong. Students of prehistoric Michigan will watch the progress of the Soper expedition with great interest, for from its discoveries the present generation will learn much of the lives and habits of the ancients who inhabited this state.

This Is The Use Of It.

Chicago Inter-Ocean: Since Dr. Cook announced his discovery of the north pole the question "What is the use?" has frequently been heard.

This: We know where once we did not. We have taken one more step toward bringing the entire globe within the compass of familiar knowledge. We have pierced the heart of an age-long mystery. To know is greatly worth while, it is its own reward. Suppose no consequences come of the discovery. Suppose that science, art, industry, are never called on to acknowledge a debt to the intrepid explorer. No matter. Merely to know is enough.

To Americans the exploit has this further value: It is a legitimate quickener of national enthusiasm, price, self-confidence. It is a triumph of the American spirit. It was performed in a typical American way.

The American idea is that the way to do things is to do them. John Sherman expressed it: "The way to resume specie payments is to resume." Myself S. Grant expressed it: "I propose immediately to move your works." Farragut expressed it: "Damn the torpedoes! Go on!"

Dr. Cook was possessed of it. Result: The American flag floats at the north pole.

Let no one, least of all an American, henceforth feel that this long record of heroism, this long struggle to know, for knowing's sake, has ended in a demonstration of its uselessness!

A MAIDEN'S SECRET
By WELLESLEY PAIN

May Chedworth, in a pale-blue morning gown, sat at her writing table near the open window of her bedroom. A few thoughts so entirely possessed her that she did not enjoy to the full—as was her daily custom—the view of the old-fashioned garden or the flower-scented breeze that fanned her cheeks.

She was puzzled. Her self-imposed task of writing her diary every morning had recently become a disagreeable duty; at one time it had been a daily joke to be enjoyed by herself alone. Now this morning she could not write a word. A glance through a few of the preceding pages did not inspire her; on the contrary, she was forced to admit that what she had written was not a truthful record of her thoughts. The discovery perplexed her.

"Why not tell the truth?" she whispered to herself. "The truth—the whole truth?"

She took a large piece of paper from a drawer and wrote at the top of it—"My Confession."

At that moment a clock in the house struck the three-quarters, reminding her that she would soon have to dress for breakfast. She opened her door half an inch, listened, and then darted across the landing to the bathroom. Having turned on both taps she flew noiselessly back to her bedroom and took up her pen.

Now that she had decided to tell herself the truth the task of writing her diary would be easy. She resolved to put her thoughts on paper just as they presented themselves, and the first thought she dashed down was: "I love him."

Written down in that way it seemed wrong, even in a special diary composed of one piece of hand-made paper. In a moment, however, she was quickly adding other words:

"I love him—I love him! I don't know when I began to love him. I seem to have loved him always. I know there has been a time in my life when I did not know him, and yet I was happy. That seems impossible. I love him. I want him—always."

She paused, and her thoughts became a day-dream. The striking of a clock brought her thoughts back to the present with a bound. She remembered suddenly that the taps in the bathroom were turned on; the place would be flooded. Ten minutes afterward she was back in her room and sitting dumb with perplexity before the open window. As she had entered her room the draught had lightly lifted her "special diary" out of the window. The man who had inspired her to write those thoughts was now standing under her window with the paper in his hand. He was reading it. How to explain the writing of that paper was a problem she had not solved when, ten minutes afterward, she opened the door of the breakfast room.

In the morning they played tennis; she cared nothing for the game, but was grateful for it because it enabled her to be near him. All during the morning he said nothing about the paper, but when the game was over and they were sitting in a cool arbor he suddenly drew it from his pocket.

"Miss Chedworth," he said abruptly, "I have a confession to make."

"A confession?" She tried to speak lightly, and she hoped she succeeded. "I found this in the garden this morning, and I took the opportunity of reading it. For that I crave your forgiveness. I—er—I had an idea you wrote short stories. Was Chedworth?"

She had not thought of that explanation of the paper, and was glad he had suggested it. Her dilatory was practically over now.

"I thought everybody wrote now adays," she said lightly.

She looked away. The secret of her life was before him and to have nothing of it. She felt that if she could not get away from him at once she would faint or become hysterical. She half rose to go, but he put a finger lightly on her arm.

"Won't you stay a little longer?" he asked. "It's cooler here than out there. But that—that's not why I wanted you to stay here. I tried to make up another story out of this piece of paper, but I don't know how it's to end. I can't put things just as I should like to, but this paper expresses my thoughts exactly. I—I love you! May the story end happily?"

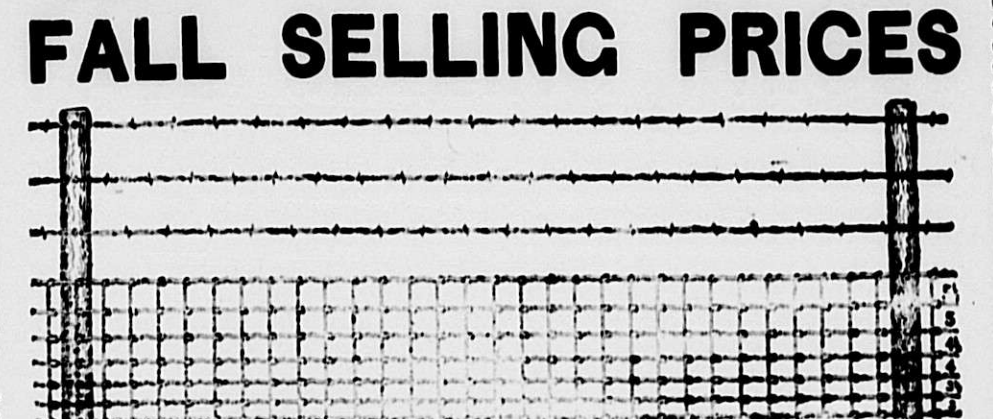

He drew her to him and kissed her, and she lay in his arms. She hid her face on his shoulder.

"That evening she told him of the blank diary in her diary, and how what she had written down was not the beginning of a story, but the truthful confession of her own feelings toward him.

"Don't you loathe me now for being so unmaidenly?" she asked. "I had to be truthful to myself."

"Loathe you!" he exclaimed. "A thousand times no, my darling. I adore you, and you make me very happy. You were mine before I knew you were mine—that's all. I never dared to think I should be as happy as this."

Quality—That's What Counts

In this enlightened day and age everyone wants to buy right and as a rule knows where to find a quality dealer. It's that show-me attitude of the buying public that has compelled progressive manufacturers in all lines to improve the quality of their product. "Dirt cheap" clothes no longer have a place in the tailoring world. This is a quality age. Rock bottom prices, up-to-date fashions, attractive woolen patterns, are three essentials, but most important of all is Quality in materials and Quality in workmanship. If the garment is lacking in either of these respects, it is dear at any price and most everyone knows it. Order your Fall Suit or Overcoat while the line is complete. 400 late patterns to select from. You'll get 100 cents in Quality for every dollar you spend.
