The Why Superstitions By H IRDING KING

THE SPLIT ROWAN

TN NORTHERN New England and in the maritime provinces of Canada a popular cure for a child suffering from congenital hernia is to pass it nine times through a split mountain ash (rowan) tree. This must be done at sunrise and some say that the operation must be performed in the presence of the parents and upon the morning of May 1. In some sections it is believed that if a person cured in this manner afterwards sits by a fire in which mountain ash is burning he will feel great pain.

This superstition exists in this country in almost the exact form in which it exists in rural England, where it has been known from the earliest days reached by tradition. The number of times which the child should be passed through the split tree varies in different localities and in England the true ash is the designated tree. Sunrise is always designated for the time of the cure, but in some localities only is the date of May 1 mentioned.

The "strict constructionists" assert that the opening in the tree must be split so that it runs east and west and the child passed through it toward the

to the Spawning Beds A Chinook salmon entering the mouth of the Columbia river in the month of March or April is a strong swimmer, weighing anywhere from twenty to eighty pounds.

She has fed fat on sea food and her egg sacs may contain from 1,500 to 6,000 eggs. The flesh of the salmon is bright pink, almost red, and is full of oil. When she leaves the sea and heads upstream, her last meal has

The fatty tissue in the body is the fuel for the long trip and the food that nourishes the eggs.

An all-powerful instinct has taken possession of the Chinnok, for day by day she heads slowly on toward the spawning bed. It is a journey of perhaps a thousand miles and with many obstacles to pass; the trip may take from four to six months.

The trail of the Chinook leads past endless lines of gill-nets, the wire fences of fish traps, the barriers of set-nets and fish wheels, the dangerous entanglements of seines, deadly whirling baits, spears, and other ingenious devices, to say nothing of the many natural and artificial dams.

But the Chinnok never loses sight of her mission in life. In the long struggle over innumerable obstacles, her body may be attacked by fungus and disease, her fins may be half worn off, but she keeps on heading up stream between rock walls where the torrent boils until at last she is at home on the gravelly bars of the head

By turning and twisting, she wallows out a nest in the sand and gravel and in the final effort of life lays her eggs. Her mate is close behind. He keeps other fish away .-W. L. Finley in Nature Magazine.

Snuff Habit Dying

Offer a woman of today a pinch of snuff, and she will be quite as much offended as a Victorian dame by the offer of a cigarette. Yet a century ago the invitation would have been accepted without demur.

In those days the taking of snuff was at once a pleasure and a ceremony. An elaborate ritual surrounded a practice smiled on by the highest in the land. George IV had his King's Morning Mixture and his King's Evening Mixture, his King's Plain and his it by moving it around in some way King's Carolle. We lived in the rue de Douai in Montmartre. The room, six flights up, with a trapdoor for a window, was furnished with two iron cots and very little else. I remember we used champagne bottles for water. For all this we paid 30 francs a month. No heat, of course, and in winter the cold was unspeakable.

One night I got an idea, and, taking my blanket, started across the icy, red-tiled floor to get into my roommate's bunk. In the middle of the room I ran into someone: It was he coming to sleep with me! We laughed and went out and bought a roast chicken and a bottle of wine. It did not take much to start a party in those days .-From "Seven to Seventy,' by Edward

British Wit

That British humor can be as exaggerated as that of the typical American gag is proved by the following from a London weekly. A meeting of the district council was in progress to consider a complaint about the muddy state of the roads in the outlying districts. One of the councilors said: | in question the other morning when I saw a man's hat on top of the mud. I touched it with my stick and was astonished to hear a man's voice from beneath. 'My friend,' I said, 'It's a bit thick there, isn't it?' 'It ain't 'alf,' came the answer, 'an I'm on the top o' the bus!"

Fireproof

A rich manufacturer of asbestos took a house just across the street from a sweet-spirited old lady, and his family proceeded to enjoy itself in what seemed to her a very worldly fashion. The old lady was never known to speak ill of anyone, even when her neighbors raised a racket all Sunday. She only said: "Dear me! They must have great faith in their asbestos."

an Imperial Decree Unhappy Austria has too recently emerged from the dread shadow of famine for any Austrian not utterly callous or frivolous to regard wholesome food of any kind with contempt. But it was not always so. Nearly a hundred years ago when tourists from America were rare—so we learn from the "Reminiscences of an Idler"-an American visiting Vienna found everyone laughing at the latest whim of the Emperor Ferdinand, who was an amiable and thick-witted monarch, deeply interested in petty and personal matters and not in the least interested in large and national affairs.
