ROAD FINANCE PLAN CHANGE IS PROPOSED

A new proposal for revision of the highway finance system made its appearance in the House of Representatives last Thursday afternoon. A measure providing distribution of $1,000,000 annually to the townships of the state from the gasoline tax proceeds and a bill providing for repeal of the Covert road tax statute were offered by Rep. Fred C. Holbeck, of the Arenac district.

The fund, it is proposed to give the townships from the gas tax fund, would be equally divided, according to the proposal. There is another measure before the house roads and bridge committee sponsored by Rep. Ate Dykstra, Grand Rapids, which provides for division of weight tax proceeds between the state, cities, villages and townships and counties.

Representative Holbeck believes the distribution to the townships can be made from the gas tax without hampering the state's construction program. He asserts that maintenance of township roads is of utmost importance to farmers. Repeal of the Covert act would remove a burden from the rural districts, he believes.—Lansing State Journal.

SCHOOL NOTES

High School

Every student in the high school who is either absent or tardy must have a written excuse signed by one of the parents or by the guardian before he will be allowed to make up his work. The faculty asks that the parents will see that the students have their excuses as soon as they return to school after they have been absent or tardy. The reason for the absence or tardiness should be stated on the excuse.

The following students received no mark lower than a "B" for the month of January and are therefore placed on our Honor Roll: Seniors, Theodora Look and Onalea Main; Juniors, Harold Hartmann and Elvera Kasischke; Sophomores, Alvera Goedecke and Delta Leslie; Freshmen, Viola Burtzloff, James Mark, Elsie Mueller, and Leona Ulman.

The Junior class again had the highest scholastic average, receiving an average of 2.500 for the month of January. The Senior class was next with 2.110; followed by the Sophomore class with 2.262, while the Freshmen class had the lowest average with 2.047. The average for the entire school was 2.265. These averages are computed by using 4 points for every "A", 3 for every "B", 2 for every "C", 1 for every "D", and 0 for every "E."

The Sophomore class had the highest attendance record for the past school month. Their percentage of attendance was 98.9%; the Senior class had 98.4%; the Junior class had 97.0%; and the Freshmen class had 91.2%.

Every student receiving an "E" Condition, Incomplete, or three (3) "D's" on his report card will not be allowed to read magazines during school hours.

We are pleased to learn that Mr. Ralph Johnson of the English Department of the University of Michigan will give a recital, "The Servant in the House," at the East Tawas community house next Monday evening. The recital will be given under the joint auspices of the East Tawas Parent-Teachers Association and the Tawas City Twentieth Century Club, and so will be free to the public. All high school students who possibly can attend should do so. We expect, too, that Mr. Johnson will address the students of the local high school on Monday.

Miss Irene Sommerfeld, a graduate of T. C. H. S., and a senior in the nursing department of the University of Michigan, gave an interesting and instructive talk to the high school girls Monday afternoon concerning the work at the University.

HECTOR FLYNN

Hector Flynn, age 54 years, seven months and 25 days, died on Wednesday, January 23, at Flint.

Hector Flynn, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Flynn, was born May 29, 1874, in Kintore, Canada. He came with his parents to Michigan when three years of age, and resided in this state until his death. He followed the occupation of blacksmithing in Whittemore, where he also held the office of mayor for two terms. Fraternally, he was a member of the Free and Accepted Masons of Whittemore, of which he was Worshipful Master for some time, also being a member of the Consistory.

He leaves to mourn, his aged father, one son, Aaron Flynn of Flint, one daughter, Mrs. Ludger La-pratt of Caro, eight grandchildren, one brother, two sisters and a number of other relatives, besides many friends. His wife preceded him in death ten years ago.

The funeral services were held from the M. E. church in Whittemore Saturday afternoon, Rev. Beddell officiating. The Masons were in charge of the funeral and the O. E. S. choir rendered the singing.

MRS. ADOLPH CATALINE

Luey A. Sheppard was born in Huron county, January 16, 1880, and died January 19, 1929 at the age of 49 years and three days. She came to Iosco county with her parents when 13 years of age and was married to Adolph Cataline on January 21, 1898.

Besides her husband, she leaves to mourn her parents, Mr. and Mrs. James Sheppard, one son, Glen, two step-sons, Sterling and Benton, four brothers, Will, Hyram, Thomas and George, three sisters, May, Christina and Myrtle, three grandchildren, many nieces and nephews, besides a host of friends.

She was a member of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints and was always to be found working for the advancement of the faith.

The funeral was held last Wednesday from the L. D. S. church at Whittemore, Elder Bert of Bay City officiating, assisted by Elder Umphrey of Bentley and Elder Sommerfeld of Tawas City. It was one of the largest funerals held from that church. Although the weather and roads from the severe snow storm kept many away, the church was packed and the many floral tributes showed the high esteem in which she was held. Her quiet Christian life endeared her to many. She was president of the Ladies Literary Club. Eight of the club members rendered the singing for the funeral services. Eight of the Oreoles girls acted as flower girls. She will be sadly missed in the church activities as well as in the community.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES

The following items were gleaned from the recent meeting of the State Executive Committee of the Michigan Council of Religious Education and reported by Mrs. Helen N. Shattuck, who was in attendance at that meeting:

Kiwanis and Rotary Clubs of Pontiac unite with Ministerial Association in inviting to that city the 1929 convention of Sunday school workers. Invitation accepted and dates fixed, October 29, 30, 31.

"More constructive work done for children per capita in Iosco than in any other county in 1928," reported Miss Catton.

"Let us re-challenge the men of Michigan to the task that is theirs in the church school."—Bernard Coggan.

A Scotchman of crusading spirit, Dr. Hugh Magill arrested the attention of his hearers with his optimistic report of the increasing appreciation of co-operative religious education. He said that in 1928 thirty-three denominational boards gave $30,000 to the International Council. He quoted a Lutheran leader as saying, "This is a vision of a new day."

Morgan Williams, Baptist educational director, urged that the various denominational boards of our state assist the Michigan Council by a financial gift and also that local churches be given denominational credit for contributions to county work.

It was a great meeting, great in spirit and vision. Ministers and laymen of all denominations, putting aside differences of creed and

KANOTIN CLUB HOLDS ANNUAL MEET MONDAY

The annual banquet of the Kanotin Club was held in the Holland Hotel Monday evening. Seventy-five were present, including the wives of the Kanotin members. The banquet was opened by the singing of a song led by Rev. Edinger. The business meeting was next held, presided over by D. J. Bergeron. Both the secretary's and treasurer's reports given by R. Elliott and R. G. Schreck respectively, were voted upon with approval.

The addresses of the evening were made by T. F. Marston of Bay City and Arthur W. Stace of Ann Arbor. Mr. Marston stressed tourist trade, hoping our citizens could arrange for features that would lengthen each camper's stay here one day longer. Mr. Stace's address dealt with Michigan—the various ways in which the state equals or excels other states. The talk was very interesting from the point of information given and should create more pride in the glory and wealth of our state.

After the banquet, the election of officers took place. The directors were chosen by the nominating committee and then the directors chose the officers and committees. The following are the officers for the ensuing year: President, John Stewart; Secretary, G. A. Pollard; Treasurer, Grant Shattuck. The music for the evening was furnished by Miss Dorine Pollard and Torrey Osgerby.

WHITTEMORE FIVE CRUSHES ALABASTER

The Whittemore Independent basketball team defeated the Alabaster five by a score of 35 to 11 at Whittemore Wednesday evening. The Whittemore boys started off with a rush, making 16 points before the visiting team could make one point. The second half was more closely played, with Whittemore out-scoring their opponents by a score of 20 to 10. McKenzie and Forsten were high point men, making 31 points between them. The game was played cleanly throughout, with but few personal fouls called on either team.

Before the game Smith and Cowan put on a boxing match much to the interest of the spectators.

STOP SHORE ROAD SURVEY BECAUSE OF HEAVY SNOW

Engineer Joseph Doyle of the State Highway Department, who has charge of the work of making the survey of the so-called Lake Huron Shore resort road from Omer to Cheboygan, a distance of about 165 miles, is now at his home in Cheboygan, having been compelled to suspend work on the line for a short period on account of the deep snow. The preliminary survey has been completed nearly to the Cheboygan county line, and as soon as the weather conditions settle the snow sufficiently, the work will be resumed.

In the meantime Doyle is at work on matters connected with the project. H. L. Brightman of Lansing chief of surveys, was in Cheboygan a few days ago in consultation with Mr. Doyle in regard to the work and this week Mr. Doyle will go to Lansing on business connected with the survey.—Presque Isle County Advance.

doctrines, and working together harmoniously and loyally for the co-operative program of religious education in Michigan. And it is good to feel that Iosco is keenly alive to the obligations and opportunities of this "vision of a new day."

KOBS—McLEOD

A very pretty wedding was solemnized at seven o'clock Saturday evening, January 26th, when Miss Johanna Kobs was united in marriage to J. Glenn McLeod. The ceremony was planned by intimate friends of the bride and was performed at the home of the Misses Lucile Brown and Ola Hiller in Pontiac. The bride and groom were attended by Miss Mina B. Fraser and Edwin Groesbeck.

A bowl of flowers on the mantle and two great baskets of snapdragons and tulips on either side furnished an attractive setting for the ceremony. After "Because" by d'Hardelet was sung by Ola Hiller, the bridal party took its place before the mantle, and the Lutheran service was read by Reverend H. J. Riethmeier. The bride was lovely in a gown of soft blue georgette. She carried a shower bouquet of yellow roses and Japanese lilies. Miss Fraser wore a dress of peach georgette and carried Columbia rosebuds.

After the ceremony, the bridal party and guests were served a delicious dinner at the Silver Lake Country Club. Those present were intimate friends of the bride from Royal Oak, Ferndale, Detroit and Pontiac, and the following relatives of the bride and groom: Mrs. Chas. Moeller and son, Harold, Arthur Kobs, Carl Kobs, and Malcolm McLeod of Tawas City, and Mr. and Mrs. Byron Groesbeck and son of East Lansing.

For the past four years, Mrs. McLeod has been a teacher in the Royal Oak schools. Many delightful affairs have been given in her honor during the past few weeks. Mr. and Mrs. McLeod will make their home in Chicago.

TWENTIETH CENTURY CLUB

The club met at the home of Mrs. B. Wilson Saturday, January 19. After the business session, the following program was given:

Book Review, "Timber," Miss Crosby; American Artists, Miss Graham; Piano Solo, Mrs. Musolf. There was a splendid attendance and to those who were not present we will say, "We missed you and you missed a fine program."

But "Lest you forget," we meet Saturday, February 2, with Mrs. Wm. Osborne. Roll call: Famous men, when and where born. Lincoln Stories, Mrs. Dora Mark; Some Other Great American Born in February, Mrs. Watts; Music.

CRAWFORD-ASTHER TEAM WINS SCREEN LAURELS

Joan Crawford and Nils Asther loom as a new team of screen lovers in "Dream of Love," which plays Sunday and Monday at the State Theatre as a new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer feature.

In this brilliant picturization of the French play, "Adrienne Lecouvreur," Miss Crawford and Asther give the finest and most forceful performances of their careers and win new laurels as dramatic artists.

Fred Niblo, who directed the modernized version of the play which Sarah Bernhardt made famous, surrounded the featured couple with an elaborate supporting cast, including Aileen Pringle, Carmel Myers, Warner Oland and many others of note.

Miss Crawford, fresh from her triumphs in "Our Dancing Daughters" and "Four Walls," gives an outstanding portrayal of the gypsy dancing girl who rose to stage stardom in the little Balkan province where her lover was pretense to the throne. Nils Asther is dramatically romantic as the Crown Prince who is willing to give up the throne for the gypsy girl. In the new M-G-M feature Miss Pringle returns to the roles that brought her prominence upon the silver sheet. She is exotically regal as the Grand Duchess, and Warner Oland, as the Grand Duke, is fittingly grim and cruel. Carmel Myers again is the beautiful siren whose temptations do much to upset the royal domestic bark.

Niblo, in bringing this story to the screen from Dorothy Farnum's adaptation, has presented many scenes of rare cinematic brilliance and the love episodes between Asther and Miss Crawford are handled with a delicate warmth.

Tentatively the meeting at Barton City is set for August 6th. Log-rolling and other contests are billed for this occasion.

At Lincoln on September 13th (Friday), mock court will be in session. The famous mock trial specialist, Lewis Dewey, will prosecute, while the defense attorneys will be headed by Past Grand Master Hanson and George Herman. Legal history will be established on this auspicious occasion, presided over by Hon. F. E. Dease, mock trial potentate and judge.

The last meeting is at Mikado. It will be especially a young folks' gathering and under the supervision of Mrs. Oscar Anderson, Vice-President of the Federation. One surprise after another for this particular gathering.

LIKED HER OWN NEST BEST

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

MRS. JULIA FULTON was the first to appear at the breakfast table in her daughter's luxurious apartment. She sat down in her accustomed place and accepted with a sigh the half of a superior grapefruit which Emily, the maid, placed before her.

Although it was not a dark morning a lighted luminaire softly revealed the excellence of the table service, the American walnut furniture of a Queen Anne design, the silken hangings and the pot of daffodils which furnished a cheerful note for the otherwise somber room. Judy (she preferred that to Julia) gazed at the flowers thoughtfully. They were unmistakably hothouse and lacked the freshness of an outdoor airing.

Judy patted back a yawn with the plump hand upon which gleamed a couple of magnificent rings. She had not slept well. She never did sleep well at Alice's. Too much going on in the house. Those people overhead had danced until midnight. Of course, that hadn't troubled Alice for she had been out somewhere. No expecting her to breakfast. She wouldn't arise until just in time for luncheon.

The door opened and her son-in-law entered.

"Good morning!" was his greeting. He sat down, passed a smooth hand over his dark, freshly shaven chin and then unfolded the paper lying beside his plate. That paper was between him and Judy during the remainder of the meal. When, having finished he hastily withdrew, merely flinging a word of excuse in her direction. A moment later he was on his way downtown to return no more until evening.

Judy retired to the living room and sat down by the window with her crochet work. She had a long morning before her. Nothing to do but crochet until Alice appeared. And outside—somewhere, the spring sunshine must be falling like gold on the new springing grass, crocuses sticking up their lovely heads above dank mold, robins skirmishing for earth worms.

"Let's see," said Judy rubbing her aristocratic old nose with her crochet needle. "It is seven weeks today since I came here to Alice's. And before that I was five weeks at my son's. Twelve weeks all told. A long time. H'm, well, but I had to do it. I got no peace until I came. First Horace and then Alice. Mother, you are too old to live alone way off there by yourself. You mustn't do it. Wait till they get to be seventy-two and see how they feel. Not that they'll have any children to fuss about them," sighed Judy.

Crocheting vexed her. She tried a magazine and was horrified by the story into which she dipped. There were plenty of other diversions—a talking machine in a unique Jacobean case, a reproducing piano, a radio set even in the study, but Judy did not understand these modern time killers. She decided to go to her room and have a nap.

There she arranged herself on a chaise longue and closed her eyes. She was awakened by the opening of the door as her daughter entered.

Alice Morton was forty-five with a sixteen-year-old figure and a thirty-year-old face. She was pretty and she looked fairly fresh.

"Morning, mother!" she began. "These dinner dances always kill me. Been asleep? You funny old thing! After you slept all night, too. Don't get up. I can't stay a minute. I'm going out to luncheon and to a matinee afterward. And, oh, Lloyd just telephoned that we're to dine at the Plaza tonight. But I shall be home immediately afterward. You know, mother dear, we haven't had a real good talk yet."

"I know it. And I've been here seven weeks."

"That's nothing. Think how much longer you're going to be here—years and years, I hope." Alice caressed her mother.

"Oh, good land!" said Judy. "I'm seventy-two. I haven't a quarter of a century ahead of me the way you have. Time's short for me, Alice."

"Absurd!" But Alice's thoughts obviously were wandering. "By the way you want to wear Gongongola tomorrow," she said. "Wonderful, mother! A voice that lifts you to the heavens." "I've heard them," Judy sighed.

"My dear, I heard great singers before you were born—what's that?"

There had been a discreet tap at the door and Alice had called out, "Come!" Emily entered with a letter on a tray.

"A special delivery for you," Alice said.

Judy had colored with anxiety as she saw the familiar handwriting. "My land! It's from Nell Peabody. Something's happened." She read and gave a little cry. "Tim has disappeared."

"Nonsense!" Alice smiled tolerantly. "But I tell you he has! This letter was written yesterday and he has been gone since the night before. It isn't Nell's fault. She's taken the best kind of care of him, I know that. It's only that he has been so lonesome. He's kissed me—" Her voice broke. She arose from the chaise longue.

"Why, mother! I don't act so foolish. It's only a dog. Lloyd will get you another, any breed you like."

Judy gazed at her daughter with shocked eyes. She gasped at her daughter's indifference to what was to her so heart-breakingly poignant. "Tim is Tim," she said. "And I'm going to see if I can find him."

"You're not going to leave here just for the sake of a—wretched little cur like Tim?"

But Judy had wasted all the words she was going to on the unfeeling Alice. Besides, when she made up her mind about anything she was not to be turned aside from it.

The six-hour journey was a tedious one for Judy. She crocheted or gazed from the window and all the time she was thinking of Tim. The little scamp! She had not dreamed he could tug at her heartstrings this way. When her children had persuaded her that she must give up her independence and spend her entire time with first one and then the other of them, she had placed the little dog in a neighbor's keeping, knowing that she could not take him with her. Dogs, even little gray, bushy Scotch terriers, were not permitted in expensive apartment houses. From the first she had missed that faithful companionship and it seemed Tim had missed her until he could bear it no longer and had run away. Well, she would find him—if he was to be found. God forbid that something should have happened to the little tyke. Her eyes filled at the thought of that warm, loving heart crushed beneath careless tires.

It was past 7 o'clock when the cab left Judy at the door of the tiny white house on the peaceful street whither she had retired upon her husband's death. Nell Peabody, nobody knew she was coming. Indeed, everybody thought that she had gone away to stay. A lucky old woman she was to have a luxurious home and every care offered her.

Crocuses were coming up in the freshening grass—blue and gold and white. Their varied glances welcomed Judy, but she passed them by and went round to the back door which her key fitted. As she approached, a gray, bushy dog bounded from the step to meet her.

"Timmy!" She held him close while he barked and wriggled and lapped at her face with his eager tongue.

Nell Peabody, kind soul, came running over in astonishment.

"Why, it's you, Judy—and Timmy!" "He must have known I was coming home tonight," Judy said. She sat down on the door stone with Timmy snuggled against her and Nell by her side.

"I suppose you've only come home for a day or two to rent your house and get rid of your furniture," Nell said sadly.

Judy pulled one of Timmy's silken ears.

"Don't you want me to stay, Nell?" "Judy! If you know how lonesome I've been without you!" The woman touched Judy's hand.

"Every bird likes its own nest best even if she is a seventy-two-year-old bird," Judy laughed softly.

Iris Long a Figure in Myth and History

From earliest times the iris has figured prominently in song and story, says Nature Magazine of Washington. In the annals of Greek mythology one reads frequently of Iris, goddess of the rainbow, and the word "iris" is Greek for "rainbow."

History has it that the golden device which was on the flag of royal France, as far back as the Fifth century until the downfall of Louis Philippe in 1848, was modeled after the iris.

It is said that when Louis the Seventh of France joined the expedition of the Crusaders in 1147, he adopted the iris as his emblem, and that is how it came to be known as "Fleur-de-Lois" or "flower de Lois." Lois being the manner in which the early kings Louis signed their name. Later in English the name changed to flower-de-luce, and finally, to flower-de-lis.

Indeed, even prior to the time of these French kings, the Etruscans, who were a civilized people long before the foundation of Rome, employed the iris as a motif in ornament. The Egyptian sphinxes have a part in the story, for the iris appeared constantly in their headdress. Particularly sacred to the Virgin Mary in Catholic countries, it appears again and again in the religious pictures of the early masters.

From the shores of the northern oceans to the balmyest of seas, the iris blooms in a multitude of types and a maze of brilliant coloring that makes one dream of the splendor of the Babylon of long ago.

Certain varieties of this lovely flower revel in bogs, some decorate the edge of deserts, others display their pretty flowers in lands with definite dry seasons, while herds of them flourish with average conditions of climate and soil. Central and southern Europe and China are the centers of the original location of the iris, but it thrives on American soil as freely as any native plant.

The Walrus

Horse and walrus, as words, bear an interesting relationship to each other. Walrus, it will be found, is Dutch, of Scandinavian origin. It is, says Webster's New International Dictionary, the Danish "valros," the Swedish "vallross," the Norwegian "hvalros."

Since horse is Anglo-Saxon, a very old English word, coming from the German "ross," and the Icelandic "hross," it is obvious that the endings of the Scandinavian words for walrus mean "horse." The beginnings are the same as the Danish and Swedish "hval," a whale. Walrus is thus, literally, "whale horse."

CLOTH COATS FOR MIDSEASON; STRAW-TOUCHED FELT HATS

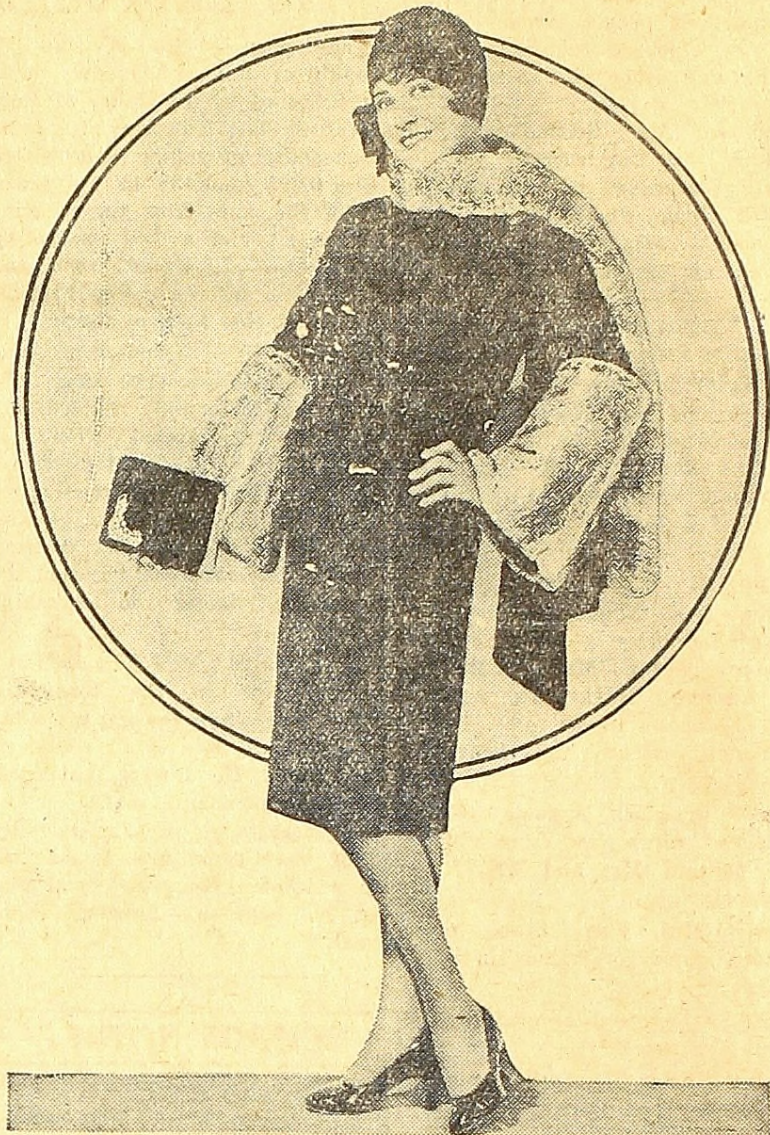

WHEN winter is on the wane and come those intermediate days when the heavy fur coat finds its way into storage, then what? The modishly furred cloth coat, of course. Which brings us to a theme of fascinating interest, namely, the exquisitely dainty furs which are lending such charm in a trimming way to coats for immediate and early spring wear.

Color plays a leading role in the realm of trimming furs. The dyers' art has been brought to a point of perfection when it comes to tinting and toning furs to blend with or match the cloth they trim. Coats of tweed, highest. Considering the ingenuity and skill with which milliners are working felt, it is no wonder that once again the felt hat is proving a magnet which is attracting all seekers of smart headwear unto it.

The ways and workings of the brims of felt hats are past analyzing. Suffice it to say that brims were never more intriguing or unusual or so universally flattering. The top hat in this picture with the embroidered flowers give a fair idea of how ingeniously brims are manipulated.

A touch of straw on a felt hat works wonders in creating a feeling of other novelty wools, of soft basket weaves and broadcloth are enhanced with furs in delicate tones of gray, honey beige, ivory, cocoa, sand and other equally as subtle shades. A coat of pale cocoa-colored cloth, trimmed with ivory or honey beige fur cannot be other than flattering to the wearer and there is every indication that this spring will bring out coats, which challenge admiration because of their symphonic colorings.

At the moment there is a flair for coats of black broadcloth with trimmings of gray fur. Kathryn Crawford, who charms in her cinema productions, poses for this picture in a coat typical of the ultra-smart for wear during the changeful, fickle days between now and spring. The scarf collar, the deep flaring cuffs indicate how cleverly thin furs are being manipulated nowadays.

The novel manner in which flay furs are being applied to cloth counts for chic as much as do their alluring tones and tints. When it comes to trimming with the new fabriclike furs Dame Fashion has an infinite number of "tricks up her sleeve." One of the caprices of the mode is to focus attention to the back of the neckline, where thin furs are tied into cunning bows or designed into intriguing intricacies of points, scallops, flares and such. Cape collars of fur are new, as are various draped effects of the more plastic furs.

Well, in the realm of smart hats, felt is still the central theme. Indeed, it is during these intermediate days 'twixt winter and spring that enthusiasm for colorful felts runs added to another—felt plus straw, silk plus cellophane and other equally as interesting alliances. The center hat trims a fine crocheted body hat with felt which forms its own natural fringe.

The last hat is a through-and-through felt model even to its plume, which is made of the felt fringed at each side.

SUCH IS LIFE by Charles Sughroe going up!

Earth Not Stable

New York.—The earth's crust probably is not "dead" and finished in shape, the American Association for the Advancement of Science was told by Dr. Bailey Willis of Stanford university.

Instead, even the stable bottom of the Atlantic ocean now may be heating up preparatory to causing land shifts. The theory is that scores of miles down in the rocks that form the skin of mother earth, great blisters form, as big as whole states, and that as they melt the rocks, the resulting upthrusts make the earth's surface what it is, and whatever it may change to.

But there was nothing of possible human catastrophe in Doctor Willis' picture, for he spoke in the new time concept of science, his changes requiring millions of years. He named well known places where on the slow time scale such shifts actually now seem under way.

Doctor Willis' address inaugurated the annual convention of the association. His subject was "the Origin and Development of Continents." He said all continents are great plateaus of granite, standing high above the sea bottoms, which are of basalt, a heavy rock.

"We know the kind of rock that underlies the sea," he said, "from seismographs. With aid of earthquakes we can sink our plummets more than half way to the center of the earth. We know the velocity at which shocks travel, the depths at which they pass through or around the earth, and the kind of rock they pass through.

"We know that the earth is enveloped about 2,000 miles thick with elastic rock, below which is a core about 2,000 miles in radius, apparently inelastic, very hard, probably iron, which may be melted."

The heat that causes blisters, he said, probably does not emanate from the earth's inner core.

"Compression by gravity," he added, "is capable of producing all the heat of which we have evidence. As rocks heat, the melting tends to extend laterally faster than upward, thus forming blisters—asthenoliths, we call them.

"Conditions favorable to formation of asthenoliths appear likely to develop in those layers thirty to six hundred miles below the earth's surface, and probably only those within less than one hundred miles of the surface directly affect it.

"A blister may grow several hundred miles across, and be ten to twenty miles deep, containing one or more million cubic miles. The cover eventually breaks around the margins, where eruptions follow, and finally the cover falls into the emptied center. Conditions thus theoretically sketched are features of the smaller depressions that are the deeps of the oceans. The Windward and Hawaiian islands are examples of volcanic ridges surrounding such deeps.

"A blister requires perhaps several million years to grow. A very large number of eruptions, a great many blisters and an enormous lapse of time must have been required to form Africa, Eurasia and the Americas in this way. The complex structure of each continent corresponds with the multiplicity of actions required by the theory."

Unusual Home

Wichita, Kan.—George Dooley of Wichita is the head of a peaceful household consisting of his wife, his former wife, and his five-year-old daughter, Katherine.

When Mrs. Daisy Dooley received her divorce from Dooley the court ruled Katherine should be in the custody of her mother three days out of each five, and with the father the remainder of the time. Dooley remarried, and now all live in the same house.

The two Mrs. Dooleys declare they are not in the least jealous of each other. Katherine receives the loving attentions of both her mother and her stepmother, who co-operated in giving her a merry Christmas day.

When asked which of her mothers she loved most, Katherine replied: "I love both of them. I love my mamma and I love Neva, and I love my daddy lots and lots."

Dooley, who is United States quarantine inspector for this district, said he was very happy over the success of his unusual arrangement.

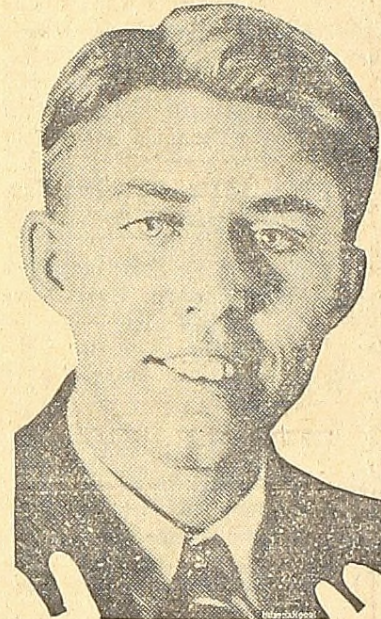

"You know some people have funny ideas about marriage," he said.

"They can't see how a scheme like this will work.

"For five months I was on the Chicago police force and both my present and ex-wife were with me. All of the boys used to wonder how I could manage it. Some declared 'I can't even get along with one woman, how can you live with two?' But I really am happy and so are they."

The present Mrs. Dooley (Neva) explained the situation this way: "Last October I lost my only child, a little boy. Kitty is taking his place in my life and at the same time filling her mother's heart with joy."

SHOULD ONE GO TO COLLEGE?

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

I am right in the midst of high school commencements while I am writing these paragraphs, running here and there to give the young person just graduating advice as to what to do and where to do it. Most of these young people are going to college whether they have any particular talent for study or not. It is the vogue now to do so; a boy who does not go to college is almost as peculiar as a twenty-year-old with long whiskers. I am asked a good many questions by young and old relative to educational procedure after high school and these I shall make some attempt to answer.

Should one go to college? There is no categorical answer to the question. It depends upon conditions just as the advisability of getting married does. There is no doubt that an overwhelming majority of those who have attained distinction in this country in practically every line of work have had college training, and that those who will attain such distinction will have a similar training. The trained mind grasps a situation more quickly than an untrained one, adapts itself more readily to new and strange conditions, has a broader vision and better understands human nature. The men who have most succeeded have had college training or minds which would have readily adapted themselves to such training. Some young people have not the financial backing necessary to go through college, nor the concentration of mind and the physique to earn their way while carrying a college course. These may well hesitate before going to college.

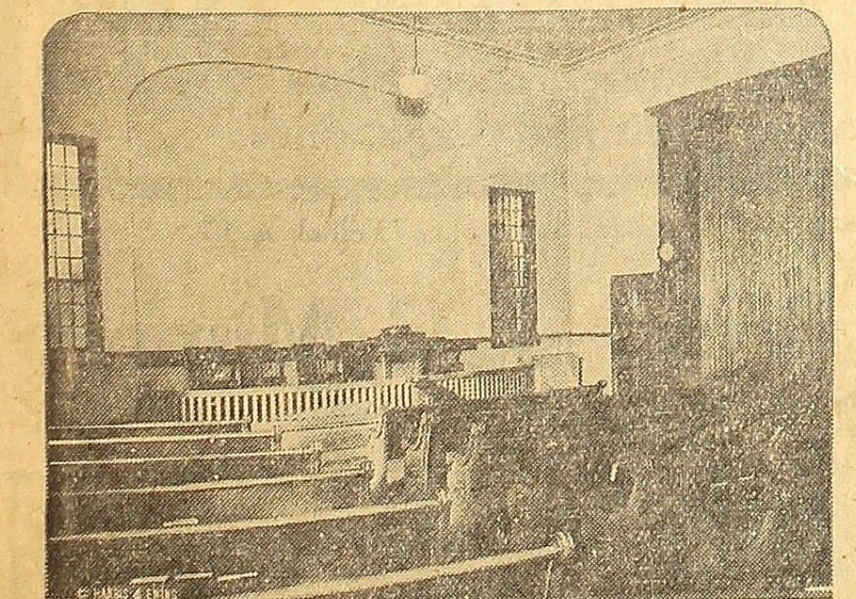

The work of college demands mental curiosity—an interest in every problem which concerns itself with human thought and human life. Too few people have such an interest. No one should go to college who does not like books and reading and study. The educated man or woman must have had a good many years of pretty constant association with books, and unless that association is one which brings enjoyment and enthusiasm the work is likely to be pretty indifferently done. I see scores of young people in college who have no real interest in study, who go to their books with reluctance and dragging feet and who lay them down with a sigh of joyful relief when the assigned task has been indifferently completed. Such people have no place in college. Their task in life is to do some practical rather than intellectual job of which there are still plenty to be done.

Why Fish Are Cold Blooded

The fish is a cold-blooded animal because of the lack of oxygen in the water. Man and the higher types of animals produce body heat from the oxygen in the air and in this way maintain a steady body temperature. The fish can only take on the temperature of the water in which it lives.

"Forever American"

Washington.—Through the gift of the French village of Moyennoutier of the ground occupied by the grave of Lieut. Thomas R. Plummer of New Bedford, Mass., a controversy of ten years comes to an end.

Unlike most American families whose sons fell in France, the Plummers strongly desired that Lieutenant Plummer's body be left in the little French cemetery where it was buried two days before the armistice was signed and a few days before the Croix de Guerre awarded him by the French government was received.

This caused the unwinding of much red tape. Lieutenant Plummer, although fifty years of age when the war broke out, enlisted in the American Red Cross and was assigned to the French village of Moyennoutier, just behind the French lines. There he did such valiant work that he was beloved by the entire population of the village. They buried him with highest honors in their own village cemetery. His death was the result of unselfish devotion to sick and wounded French soldiers.

When the work of removing American soldiers' bodies to government cemeteries in this country and France began Lieutenant Plummer's grave was one of the few isolated ones marked "Do not disturb."

The government could not leave soldier's bodies without definite title to the land or without assurance that graves would be properly cared for, however.

After much interchange of correspondence between the town council of Moyennoutier, the cemetery division of the quartermaster corps of the United States army and the family of Lieutenant Plummer, the problem was solved with receipt of the title to the ground occupied by the grave.

A Statesman Looks at Lincoln

Abraham Lincoln Pictures Courtesy Houghton Mifflin Company

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

ONLY about once in the proverbial "blue moon" is there published a book which is so important as to justify us in regarding its appearance as a "news" event. In order to reveal some hitherto unknown facts about a subject which is of considerable interest to a large number of people. In some cases a new biography will measure up to that standard, but it is comparatively rare occurrence for anything, both new and of vital importance, to be discovered about a man great enough to answer the qualification of "considerable interest to a large number of people." In America about the only men of whom this would be true would be Washington and Lincoln.

There have been so many books written about Abraham Lincoln—the number runs into the hundreds—and the whole field of Lincolniana has been so thoroughly combed that it does not seem possible to discover anything new about him. Nor is it likely that a new Lincoln book would ordinarily excite more than casual interest and discussion. However, within recent months there has appeared a new work on Lincoln which has been "news," in that news stories have been written about it. This addition to the store of knowledge about the Great Emancipator is the two-volume work written by the late Albert J. Beveridge, former United States senator from Indiana, under the title of "Abraham Lincoln, 1809-1858," and published by the Houghton Mifflin company.

It is a striking fact about this "Lincoln" that the literary critics have been unanimous in pronouncing it the most important study of Lincoln that has yet been written and one newspaper devoted no less than a full page to a review of it by a man of national prominence. He was Claude G. Bowers, "keynoter," at the Democratic national convention, at Houston, last year, a friend of Beveridge and himself a biographer and historian of renown. In his review he said: "It seems incredible that we have had to wait for almost seventy years for a biography of Lincoln dealing adequately with the first fifty years of his life. The monumental biography of Nicolay and Hay was written with frank partisanship and, worse still, under the critical eye of Robert Todd Lincoln, who, until the end of his long life, appeared more prone to concealment than to revelation. The Herndon biography was unquestionably the most starkly honest but its very honesty damned it in the eyes of those who preferred to deify rather than to explain its subject. By that time we had entered upon the myth-making period, followed with a flood of biographies written in the spirit of extravagant praise, and the result has been that the Lincoln who lived before the debate has been comparatively unknown until now."

So we have had the great number of books on Lincoln written by every type of person—by biographers and professional historians, by teachers and preachers, by lawyers, by poets and by novelists. And, as one reviewer has pointed out "Hitherto every new book on Lincoln has been

So-and-so's conception of Lincoln. Senator Beveridge, however, undertook to present not Beveridge's Lincoln, but Lincoln. . . . What is more, Beveridge did what he started out to do."

How does it happen then that the real Lincoln has at last been revealed by a biographer? Perhaps the answer can be found in a statement by Mr. Bowers in which he commented upon the fact that Beveridge does justice to the true greatness of Stephen A. Douglas as it has never been done by historian before. He writes: "There was probably a psychological reason for the Beveridge understanding of Douglas—for there are some striking resemblances in both the gifts and careers of the two men. Both were orators, fighters, possessed of dash and a certain masterfulness of manner; both won renown early; both were chairmen of the senate committee on territories and helped mold legislation that made states; both incurred the enmity of powerful elements in their own party." In the same way it may be said that Beveridge had an understanding of Lincoln because both were skillful politicians who became statesmen in the truest sense of the word and in his own disappointment in the arena of politics, Beveridge could appreciate the disappointment which came to Lincoln early in his political career. So it seems entirely plausible that when "a statesman looks at Lincoln," especially at the period in Lincoln's life when the evolution of the politician into the statesman was taking place, as it was in the period which Beveridge covers in his two volumes, there should result an adequate understanding of the forces which were shaping his life and which were to make him the great man that he was.

The story of how this latest Lincoln biographer set about and accomplished his task is in itself a romantic one. Several years ago Beveridge noted principally as a brilliant orator and one of the outstanding personalities in the United States senate amazed the literary world with his two-volume "Life of John Marshall." It was hailed by scholars not as only one of the finest biographies that had ever been written by an American, but as a noteworthy contribution to American history because Beveridge had made a sweeping and magnificent interpretation of the early days of the republic through the life of the great chief justice. When in 1922 Beveridge suffered his final disappointment in politics and saw that he had missed a promised greatness in this field of activity, he again turned to writing and determined to take up again the thread of the American story, interpreting a later phase of it than the Marshall phase in terms of the career of a man greater even than Marshall—Abraham Lincoln.

Of that ambitious project and what it involved, Bowers says: "Needless to say, Mr. Beveridge did not approach his colossal task in the spirit of an iconoclast, nor in that of a blind worshiper, willing to prostitute his art as a biographer to the preservation of a myth. We have heard him say that he would hardly have had the courage to undertake the task at all had he had the slightest conception of the superficiality with which the field had been searched before. It was a tremendous task. It meant weary months with dusty manuscripts searching the long deserted avenues that promised the possibility of new light, examining thousands of old letters, turning the innumerable pages of old, yellowing newspapers and traveling over the continent on many a fruitless, as well as fruitful, journey. Scarcely had he begun, when he was appalled at the discovery of how inadequately the work had been done before. Myth after myth faded out before his searching. Thus, quite early, he said to the writer that if he were asked to speak on Lincoln he would decline. "I do not know just now what I think of Lincoln." As he proceeded, the task grew in magnitude until, at times, he felt so utterly discouraged that he half-wished to abandon it. Instead of having before him the not too laborious mission of a new interpretation, he found himself confronted with the necessity of subjecting himself to the hardships of pioneering for facts and he grimly buckled down to his job. One day he half-seriously told Justice Holmes, a neighbor at Beverly farms, that should he hear of the finding in the woods of a haggard old man, dead from exhaustion, he would know that it was a friend of his who had been foolish enough to attempt a "Life of Lincoln."

One instance of the painstaking labor which Beveridge gave to his monumental task is that wherein he obtained his information about Lincoln's career as a member of the Illinois legislature. Other biographers have hurried over this period partly because the only first-hand information on it is contained in the legislative reports which are included in several huge volumes, printed in small type and having no index. What Beveridge did was to go to Springfield, dig out these dust-covered volumes and with the aid of a magnifying glass go over them all. The result was, instead of a few hasty paragraphs such as other biographers have written about Lincoln the legislator, Beveridge's study devotes 137 pages to this period which had a vital importance in shaping the character and later career of Lincoln. Another instance lies in the statement that he wrote and rewrote the chapters of his books, not once, nor twice, but many times. One of them was rewritten 15 times before he was satisfied with it!

"At this point the pen of the writer stopped, leaving the chapter in its first draft." Such is the statement made at the end of the chapter on "The Great Debate" in the second volume of Beveridge's Lincoln. "At Mr. Beveridge's elbow were the volumes of the Debates and Schurz's autobiography, open at the pages whence he had taken the last quotation or reference. On the table, near his hand, were the heaps of notes prepared for the chapter, extracts from letters, newspapers, proceedings of conventions and legislatures, and photostats of the more important manuscripts he had found in public and private collection." For Death had stayed the hand of the great biographer of a great man. In April, 1927, Albert J. Beveridge died suddenly in the prime of his life with his story half told. Barton, another noted Lincoln biographer, has well said of Beveridge's "Lincoln": "It ends like Schubert's Unfinished Symphony." This is one of the greatest tragedies in literary history," says Bowers, who pays this final tribute to Beveridge: "However, we may rejoice in the realization that he has done for the first fifty years (of Lincoln's life) that which has never been done before, and no other could do so well. He has raised in his Marshall and Lincoln a monument to himself which will outlast marble and before which future generations will pay homage to his genius as an interpreter of the American spirit."

Dried Human Heads
Grewsome little dried up human heads are appearing in London. These heads have long been treasured as spoils of battle by certain South American tribes, and contracted by a special process of their own invention till they are doll-like in size. These heads are much valued by collectors of queer relics in London, but an expert says that there are a number of fakes going about. It appears that medical students at Quito have discovered the drying process and are now helping themselves to heads which have not fallen in battle.

The Care of the Kitchen

By CAROLINE FRENCH BENTON

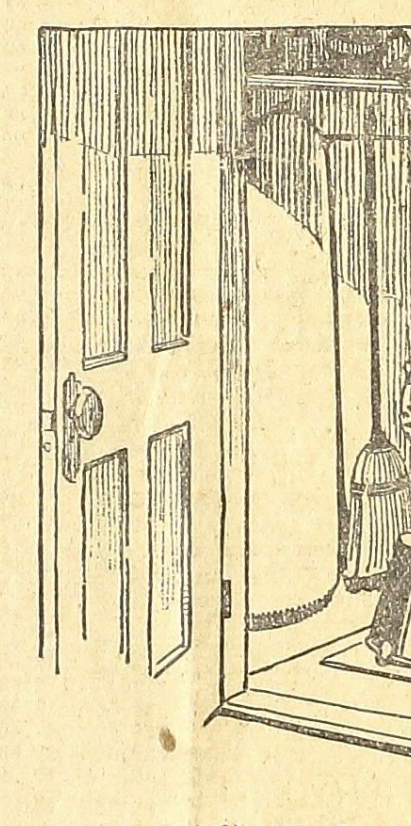

THE prettiest kitchen in the world will not stay pretty if it is left to itself. A once-a-week cleaning up will do little for it; indeed it will emphasize the neglect of the rest of the week, and the room will always wear a shabby expression. A kitchen needs daily, thoughtful care, a care that keeps it from ever needing a real cleaning up.

The floor is one's first consideration. If it is uncovered wood it is best to paint it brown. Then it needs a weekly washing or mopping, besides the daily sweeping, and rugs will prevent the paint from wearing off.

If the floor is covered with oilcloth, this must never be swept with a broom, but with a soft brush only; then it can be mopped when that is necessary, and wiped dry. Once a week it should be washed off with warm milk and water, and once a month, if possible, it should have an over-night coat of shellac; this will keep it in perfect condition for years, if rugs are used.

The best of all floor coverings is linoleum. This is expensive, but if it is taken care of, it is economical in the long run. Like the oilcloth, a broom must not be used on it, but the same soft brush. Then it can be wiped off once a week or oftener with warm water—no soap, and wiped dry.

Kitchen walls are usually painted, and in this case these must be washed off frequently or they will become smoky, and after that it is impossible to wash them without making unsightly streaks all over them. White soap may be dissolved in warm water to wash them, with a little ammonia if they look dark, and they are to be rinsed, and wiped dry. If they have this care they will need repainting only once in years, instead of more often. All the open shelves in the kitchen should also be washed often, at least every other week, and fresh papers put on when those become at all soiled. Nothing makes a kitchen look cheaper than half-clean papers; it reminds one of a pretty woman in a soiled gown. Pantry shelves are apt to collect crumbs in the corners, so these need a little extra inspection. The china closet, which has glass doors to keep out the dust, will not need washing as often as the open shelves do, but occasionally this should be carefully gone over also, and all the seldom-used dishes washed and replaced. Of course in a clean kitchen there should never be a single cockroach, but if by chance there should come such a visitor, all the shelves and crannies in the kitchen must have a bath of hot borax water, and fresh papers put on everywhere.

The kitchen sink should be white. Where there is modern plumbing in the house, this will be a matter of course; where there is an old-fashioned sink lined with iron, or corrugated iron, this unattractive spot should be altered by painting it with a mixture which comes on purpose for sinks and resists hot water. Several coats of this will make the ugliest and most unsightly sink look up-to-date. It is the easiest thing in the world to keep such a sink clean. The little brush and pan which come for this place will take up the crumbs; washing powder on a cloth removes the grease, and then a flushing with very hot water makes it all as good as new. If the drain ever clogs, a can of lye can be emptied upon it and boiling water poured through until it runs freely.

The kitchen table is one of the important things in the room, because the housekeeper must use it twenty times a day. Sometimes this table is merely the top of the stationary washbasin; then it may have a cover of enameled cloth laid over it which can be removed when the tubs are opened. The tubs themselves must be kept clean and dry, and to avoid the close odor which is too often associated with such tubs, a narrow strip of wood can be tacked under the edge of the cover so that it cannot close tightly. Just this little current of air will keep them fresh and sweet. If there is a regular kitchen table in the room, this may be painted with white enamel paint, or have a cover of oilcloth. In either case, however, it is a good plan to have a square of linoleum matching that on the floor, to lay over it when cooking. It saves the cover wonderfully and when not in use it can be hung up on the inside of the closet door.

The kitchen windows ought, of course, to be kept bright and shining. If they are washed, not with soap and water, but with a scouring soap that does not scratch, they will keep clean twice as long. The paint on the sills and sashes should be washed off often, and the curtains be laundered frequently. If, instead of curtains valances only are used, this reduces the work in washing them.

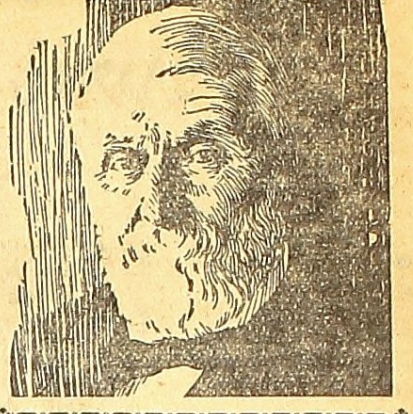

Kitchen rugs get spots of grease on them with fatal ease, and it is discouraging to have them sent to the laundry or washed at home as often as would be needed if they were left to themselves. As soon as a single spot of grease appears it should be rubbed out with hot water and ammonia, and when possible, the rug laid in the sunshine to dry. A little care here will make it unnecessary to have the whole rug washed except once in several months.

It is rather a problem in a small kitchen to know where to keep all the brooms, brushes, cloths and pails that are essential for cleaning purposes. Sometimes there is a broom closet in the hall which holds them all comfortably, but this too often is dark, and dust easily accumulates in the corners and lies there unseen.

Once a week this closet should be emptied and swept out. The broom must always stand on its end, or be hung up, for nothing shortens the life of a broom like keeping it brush-end down. So with the whisk broom; this also must have a hook; the dustpan may hang by it conveniently, and any other brushes or pans used in cleaning. The scrubbing pail must always be kept upside down, on a square of heavy paper, or oilcloth. It is most uneconomical to let it stand with even a little dampness in its inside edge. As to cleaning cloths, there may be three bags for these, all marked, or of different colors to distinguish them. In one may be kept the fresh, unused cloths, cotton and

Flush Your Kidneys Occasionally by Drinking Quarts of Good Water

DR. CALDWELL'S THREE RULES

No man or woman can make a mistake by flushing the kidneys occasionally, says a well-known authority. Too much rich food creates acids which clog the kidney pores so that they sluggishly filter or strain only part of the waste and poisons from the blood. Then you get sick. Rheumatism, headaches, liver trouble, nervousness, constipation, dizziness, sleeplessness, bladder disorders often come from sluggish kidneys.

The moment you feel a dull ache in the kidneys or your back hurts, or if the urine is cloudy, offensive, full of sediment, irregular of passage, or attended by a sensation of scalding, begin to drink soft water in quantities; also get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any reliable pharmacy and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine.

This famous salt is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to activity, also to help neutralize the acids in the system so they no longer cause irritation, thus often relieving bladder disorders.

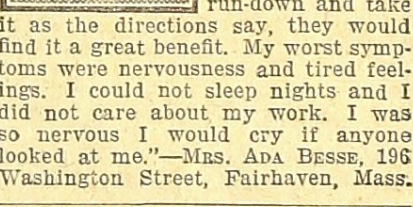

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink, which everyone can take now and then to help keep the kidneys clean and the blood pure, thereby often preventing serious kidney complications.

SYNOPSIS

That her grandfather left her the architectural monstrosity known as "Dinsmore's Folly" is, for esthetic reasons, by no means pleasing to Ethel Dinsmore, modern "flapper." She would refuse the bequest, but her father will not allow it. Edith visits the place, Perkins, the caretaker, is the victim of a matrimonial mishap, his wife having left him. Fred James, newspaper reporter, comes. Mr. Paul, Dinsmore's right-handed man, proposes to Edith and is rejected. He takes the rejection in a melodramatic manner. Edith sees a connection between Perkins' runaway wife and Mr. Paul. Riding with Fred James, Edith's horse bolts. The runaway is stopped by a stranger who does not give his name. Edith hereafter calls him M. P. (My Preserver). With her sister, Josephine, and Fred James, Edith attends a prize fight. Police raid the indignity of a girl in the same man who had stopped her runaway horse. She learns his name is Braxton, and allows him to think she is a poor relation of the Dinsmores. Telling her father she is in love with Fred James, the old gentleman arranges for Josephine and Edith to take a trip to Japan, with their Aunt Candice.

CHAPTER IV

Three days later, Aunt Candice and Josephine and I found ourselves on the ship Something-or-other, ready to start on our long voyage.

We had been on board quite a while and had seen our staterooms and put our things carefully away where we wouldn't be able to find them, and had sniffed at the flowers and sampled the candy that our beaux had sent us, and had put Aunt Candice to bed—

Oh, yes. Of course we had put Aunt Candice to bed. Aunt Candice always went to bed as soon as she got on board a ship.

Aunt Candice never got seasick, but she was affected with bilious spells that came on her abruptly, without the least apparent cause, and that bound her to her bed for days at a time. One of these had overcome her just after she had caught her first whiff of the bilge-water, and she had thought it best to lie down. I had voyaged with Aunt Candice before, and I was perfectly sure that this "spell" would last about three days unless the weather should get suddenly bad. Aunt Candice does not cut much figure in this story; she couldn't, for reasons that will very shortly appear. I mention her, merely to show that Josephine and I did not always run about unchaperoned.

When we had put her to bed we went on deck to wait for Father.

He had not been able to come down with us, but he had promised to turn up before the steamer left; and of course we had to be on deck to watch for him.

We watched and watched and the minutes flew, but Dad did not appear. It was getting perilously near sailing time, too. Still, I was not worried—much. Dad always kept his engagements and he had sworn (across his heart and hope to die) to keep this one. So I waited and trusted.

By and by a messenger boy, conveyed by a steward, came pushing through the crowd to our side and handed me a note. It was from Father.

"Don't be worried if I'm late," he wrote. "Paul and I have been detained here at the office, but I'm just about to start. I'll see you off if I have to hire a tug to do it."

This was consoling, and it pacified me for a time. But after a while I began to get irritated. Even if Father should come now he wouldn't have time to do more than say "howdy do; good-by" before the steamer started.

Then, all of a sudden, I saw Fred. He was on the lower deck and he was carrying a bouquet as big as a house. He was rampaging through the crowd exactly as if he were a football player chasing a touch-me-down—or whatever it is they chase (I never could understand football). A humane desire to save the lives of the people who stood in his path moved me to lean over the rail and bawl to him. He heard me, looked up, waved that profligate bouquet, and charged for the companionway.

A moment later he was beside us. Josephine was nearest to him and he thrust his roses into her hands. "I'm absent without leave," he panted, "and I've got to rush back right away. There's trouble around the city hall. A batch of indictments have come from the grand jury room, and it's rumored that some big sensations are going to be sprung. I've got no business to be off my beat. But I had to see you before you left. If you see your father tell him to read the papers before he goes back to his office. . . . Good-by." He grabbed Josephine's hand.

He didn't grab mine. I jerked it away. "Good gracious, Fred James," I exclaimed. "Don't be in such an awful rush. What's in the papers? And why should I tell Father?"

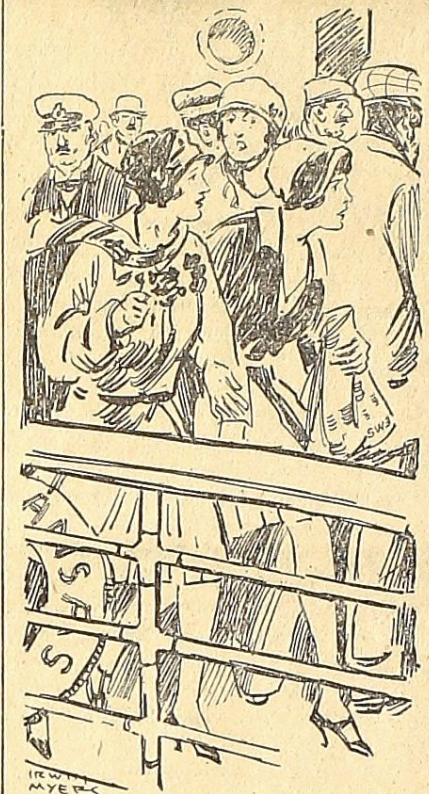

I stopped. There was no one left to talk to. Fred was halfway to the companionway, plunging over perfectly inoffensive people. I determined to punish Mr. Fred for that—when I got back from Japan.

Meanwhile I turned to the rail and looked for Father; it wasn't like him to be late. But he did not appear. I watched the crowd for a little while; and then, tiring of this, I turned and contemplated the ship.

It was about a block long (crosstown measure, of course), as broad as a church, and about four stories high, including the basement. I knew it had elevators and a swimming pool, and a dining saloon (it occurred to me right there that Aunt Candice probably never would see that dining saloon, but it didn't occur to me that I never would, either), and retail stores, and—and—lots of things. No doubt a good many of the people who had come on board to see other people off were below somewhere gawking at these things; but the people on deck were not concerned with them. They were talking, all of them—not listening. Nobody was listening, except two or three forlorn females like Josephine and myself.

"Good-by! Shoot us a wireless once in a while. . . . Wish I was going. . . . For the love of Mike, Bill, where

"Where—Where—What?" She gasped. "We—can't go ashore now! We'll be left—"

"Of course we will. We've got to be left. We wouldn't be right if we weren't left. Father has been indicted and arrested. He's in jail!" I whispered, shrilly. "We've got to stand by him. Come along!"

"Good heavens!" Josephine sagged. Then she braced up again. "But—" she began. "But—"

"Come along. You can have all the time you want to think about it when we're ashore. Come!" I put my hand and my whole one hundred and five pounds against Josephine's shoulders and ran her through the midst of the last squad of departing visitors onto the head of the gang plank. I could tell by the reel of her shoulders that she was not convinced; but then I didn't expect her to be. She went ahead, and under the circumstances that was enough to satisfy any reasonable person.

It was only when we got on the wharf and found our progress checked by the crowd that was rubber-necking upward that she objected again. "Who brought you the message from Father?" she asked.

"Message? Oh, good gracious, Josephine! I didn't get any message. Father had no way to send us a message. I read it in this paper." I thrust the miserable sheet before her eyes. "Oh! How lucky it was I heard the boy and bought a copy. Five minutes more and we'd have been carried off and poor Father would have been left all alone!"

I had been steadily propelling Josephine while I spoke, and had gotten her outside of the crowd and well down the pier before I finished. When I did finish, she stopped dead.

"How do you know that Father didn't plan to get us away because he knew that this—this dreadful thing was going to happen?" she demanded.

I caught my breath. Sure enough! How did I know? My lower jaw sagged. Then I braced up.

"Very likely he did!" I declared. "But what difference does that make? We're not going to desert him, even if he wants us to."

"I am!" Josephine's voice was decided. "If Father had wanted us to stay he'd have said so. He didn't say so; therefore he wants us to go. And I'm going." Josephine caught my arm and began to drag me back.

I didn't insist. It wasn't necessary. "All right," I said. "If you want to desert the father who bo—if you want to desert Father, I'm sorry I brought you ashore. But it's too late to get on board now. The steamer is off."

It was, too.

Josephine looked at it for a moment. Then she surrendered. I'll say this for Josephine; she has a most unfeminine habit of surrendering without any back talk, when she can't help herself. She doesn't fuss and she doesn't sulk. Really, she misses half the fun of being a woman.

Silently we walked along the pier. I called a taxi and we got in and gave the man the address, and we started.

We were half way home before either of us remembered poor Aunt Candice, prepared for the worst (which was sure to happen). Only she didn't dream how very worse it was to be. I was about to speak of it to Josephine, but on consideration—I can consider when there is no particular need to act without consideration—I decided that I had better not worry her any more.

Odd Power Credited to Precious Stones

Superstitions still persist about the magical properties of many stones. On account of that associated with the opal, the proposal is frequently made by jewelers' associations to remove it from the list of "birth stones."

Strange places have been looked in to for stones possessing unusual requirements. The gizzard of a rooster is said to have revealed a stone which rendered wives more agreeable to their husbands; the shell of a crab yielded a stone for sore eyes. Beads of paste or glass were in common use in ancient Gaul under the name of serpents' eggs. They were thought to be generated from the breath of the serpents, being shot into the air from their hissing jaws. Soldiers wore serpents' eggs to make them invincible.

It was long believed that a sap-phire would heal diseases of the eye; and such a stone was once given to the treasury of St. Paul's by a well-meaning London grocer, to be used for that purpose. There were stones to heal wounds, to aid the complexion, and to prevent drunkenness.

St. Isidore, bishop of Seville, is said to have known of a stone which, when powdered and drunk with vinegar, made men insensible to torture. There is no record, however, that he ever tried it.

Selfish Goodness

Acidity

The common cause of digestive difficulties is excess acid. Soda cannot alter this condition, and it burns the stomach. Something that will neutralize the acidity is the sensible thing to take. That is why physicians tell the public to use Phillips Milk of Magnesia.

One spoonful of this delightful preparation can neutralize many times its volume in acid. It acts instantly; relief is quick, and very apparent. All gas is dispelled; all sourness is soon gone; the whole system is sweetened. Do try this perfect anti-acid, and remember it is just as good for children, too, and pleasant for them to take.

Any drug store has the genuine, prescriptional product.

Are You Ready

When your Children Cry for It

Baby has little upsets at times. All your care cannot prevent them. But you can be prepared. Then you can do what any experienced nurse would do—what most physicians would tell you to do—give a few drops of plain Castoria. No sooner done than Baby is soothed; relief is just a matter of moments. Yet you have eased your child without use of a single doubtful drug; Castoria is vegetable. So it's safe to use as often as an infant has any little pain you cannot pat away. And it's always ready for the crueler pangs of colic, or constipation, or diarrhea; effective, too, for older children. Twenty-five million bottles were bought last year.

FEATURES OF THE NEW FORD

Safety

One of the outstanding features of the new Ford is its mechanical internal-expanding six-brake system.

This is unusually reliable and effective in action because the braking surfaces of all six brakes are fully enclosed. There is no possibility of mud, water, sand, road dirt or grease entering the brake mechanism or getting between the bands and the drum and impairing brake performance.

The use of steel forgings wherever there is a possibility of wear in the chassis of the car, the sturdy steel body construction, balance, ease of operation and control and a Triplex shatterproof glass windshield are other important features.

Comfort

You have a feeling of mental comfort in driving the new Ford because you are sure of its mechanical reliability. No matter how long the trip or rough or devious the roadway, you know it will bring you safely, quickly to your journey's end.

Reliability

The new Ford is reliable in performance because of its carefully planned simplicity of design and the enduring quality that has been built into every part.

Thousands of the new Fords have been driven more than 50,000 miles in the past year. Some used night and day have passed the 100,000-mile mark. There is no telling how far they will go. The average life of the Model T car was seven years. We believe this new car will do better than that.

Economy

The new Ford is an economical car to own and drive, because of the low cost of operation and upkeep. It averages more than 20 miles per gallon of gasoline and the cost of tires is also low.

Low first cost, the security of a fair trade-in value, the availability of Ford dealers and close supervision of service are additional reasons for the economy of the new Ford.

The cost of new parts is also low because of the established Ford policy of doing business on a small margin.

Beauty

The new Ford is distinguished by its quiet simplicity of line and air of sturdy strength. Without being extreme, it has struck a new note in motor car designing. A particularly pleasing feature is a choice of beautiful colors in body type without additional cost.

The upholstery is of woolen material, rich and luxurious, yet long-wearing. Fenders are heavy and gracefully contoured. Instrument panel—door handles—window lifts—interior trimming and finish—all reveal a quality of material and careful workmanship unusual in a low priced car.

Ease of Control

The steering wheel answers to the touch of a finger. Gears shift silently, smoothly. Brakes take hold quickly, firmly, even on rain-swept pavements. Quick acceleration and alert speed are especially appreciated in traffic emergencies.

All of these things simplify the mechanics of motoring and add a great deal to the joy of driving. Particularly to a woman, they mean driving without strain or fatigue.

Smooth Speed

Everywhere you go you note the alert, capable performance of the new Ford. You can judge its acceleration by the way it gets away in traffic. A smooth stretch on the open road gives a revealing measure of its speed. The way it climbs the hills in high is an indication of its abundant power.

The new Ford will do 55 to 65 miles per hour, which is faster than you will probably ever need to go. Far more important is the way it rolls along at 35 and 40 and 45. This is your average driving speed and you can maintain it smoothly, easily, comfortably for hours in the new Ford.

We Have a number of Dependable Used Cars. If you need a low priced car, see us at once.
