Lancaster: Gedrukt bey Francis Bailey,

Frontispiece of the Pennsylvania German almanac, printed in 1779, which made the first known reference to Washington as "The Father of His Country."

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

HOW did it happen that George Washington came to be known by the name of "The Father of His Country?" The obvious answer to that question is, of course, that a new nation, grateful to the man who had led it safely through the dangers of a revolution against its former rulers, looked upon him as its parent and appropriately elected him for its first President.

But the fact remains that Washington was known by that title two years before the struggle for liberty had been won and at least ten years before he was called to the highest executive office. To a Pennsylvania German almanac, published in Lancaster, Pa., by Francis Bailey in 1779, belongs the honor of first applying that title to Washington. The frontispiece of this almanac was a crude woodcut of a scene in which appeared several symbolic figures. In the upper left hand corner of the drawing is shown Fame as an angel, bearing in one hand a medallion of Washington with a laurel wreath upon his head and in the other a trumpet from which comes the words "Des Landes Vater"—"The Father of the Country."

Just how widespread became the use of that title as the result of the publication of this almanac is unknown, but in 1781 it was used again by Count Dumas, a French officer in Rochambeau's army. In that year George Washington had gone to Newport, R. I., to confer with General Rochambeau. Although the inhabitants of that colony had suffered terribly from the ravages of the war and were desperately poor, they desired to give the commander in chief of the Continental army an appropriate reception. To help those who had been too impoverished by the war to purchase candles with which to light their windows in his honor, the council ordered that these be given to them free. The parade in honor of Washington is described by a contemporary writer as follows:

The procession was led off by thirty boys, bearing candles fixed on staves, followed by General Washington, Count de Rochambeau and the other officers, their aides and the procession of citizens. The night was clear, and there was not a breath to fan the torches. The brilliant procession marched through the principal streets and then returned to headquarters. On reaching the door, Washington waited on the step until all the officers and their friends had entered the house; then, turning to the boys who had acted as torchbearers he thanked them for their attention. This was glory enough for the young patriots.

After his conference with Rochambeau, Washington prepared to return to his headquarters near West Point and Count Dumas was appointed by Rochambeau to escort the general from Newport to Providence. In his memoirs, Count Dumas tells of the incident and records the use of the term "father of his country" as follows:

We arrived there at night on March 13. The whole of the population had assembled from the suburbs, we were surrounded by a crowd of children carrying torches, reiterating the acclamations of the citizens; all were eager to approach the person of him whom they called their father, and pressed so closely around us that they hindered us from proceeding. General Washington was much affected, stopped a few moments and, pressing my hand, said: "We may be beaten by the English; it is the chance of war, but behold an army which they can never conquer."

In connection with the use of that term in referring to Washington it is interesting to note that a recent biography of Washington has been published by the Bobbs-Merrill company under the title of "The Father of His Country." It is written by William E. Barton, noted as a biographer of Lincoln, and in his chapter, "The Influence of Washington," Barton makes some interesting comparisons between these two great men as follows:

He loved his country and he was capable of loving every part of it. He was born in the South, but we do not think of him as a southerner. He spent his life in the East, but few men of his generation had so much faith in the West, or strove more earnestly and intelligently to bind East and West together by roads and canals. Railways, of course, he did not know about, but he would have been interested in them. There is something of close kinship in Washington's eagerness to see a great national highway from the coast to the interior, and Lincoln's great hope of seeing the completion of the Union Pacific railway. Indeed, there are many fine qualities which these two men had in common.

Washington believed in education, and sought to secure a large American university. This character, as he believed, needed intelligent citizens, and well-trained leaders.

He believed in peace with all nations, and he sought to secure that peace by justice and honor. But he was a man of courage, and when national existence or integrity was at stake, he risked his life and his fortune for his country.

Lincoln was born in poverty and spent nearly all his life a poor boy and man. Washington was born in comfort and became a man of great wealth. Lincoln overcame the handicap of poverty. Washington overcame the greater peril of wealth.

While none of the detailed descriptions of Washington describes him as a man the details of whose appearance could be accounted marks of beauty, he was a man of striking physique, and had a certain symmetry that made him nothing less than handsome in his impressiveness.

Washington and Lincoln were nearly of a height. We do not know what Lincoln measured in his stockings, and he was proud to add the height of his boot-heels to what would have been a possible gymnasium stature. He called himself six feet and four inches in height and probably in his stockings was a little over six feet and two inches. Concerning Washington we have no precise measurements and a somewhat widely varying series of statements. He probably was just about Lincoln's height. Lincoln at his heaviest weighed about one hundred eighty. Washington was about two hundred. Washington was spare and Lincoln always thin. Both had narrow chests. Neither had a large head in proportion to his body, and that of Washington, while about the size of the average head, seemed small because his body was so large. Both men carried their heads well, on finely poised necks. Washington had enormous feet and hands; Lincoln's feet were about the size of Washington's but his hands were much smaller. Washington's largeness showed itself in the bulk of his bones and the prominence of his joints. Lincoln's joints were not unusually prominent, but his bones were very long in proportion to their bulk. Both men were powerful physically and retained their strength into later years.

Each of these men, called to high and perilous responsibility in an hour of national peril, faced dangers, misunderstandings and misrepresentation. Each of them remained true to his convictions and unflinchingly loyal to the country. Each of them was loyal to conscience, sincere, religious, sympathetic, courageous, patriotic and public-spirited.

Of the influence of this "father of his country" upon the nation which he founded and as a final tribute to the greatness of the man himself, Barton writes in the same chapter as follows:

American education was certainly not established by Washington nor is he the foremost example of it; but his was an early and emphatic influence in favor of the development of education in America itself, that should train our national leaders and enable every American citizen to think and act intelligently.

In all his transactions with the government, as private citizen, as soldier and official, no act of Washington fell below the high standard of honor which was inherent in his character. His personal integrity and his public probity were of the highest quality.

The influence of Washington is still to be found in the traditions that belong to the Presidential office. With modifications such as have come naturally through the years, the dignity and influence of the office of the President is what it is in no small part because Washington established its precedents and wisely thought out its customs.

The relation of the United States with other nations are largely what they are because of the wisdom of Washington in his definition of the American attitude.

The United States after long struggles with sectionalism and divisive issues, have come to see more and more the wisdom of Washington's vision of a great and completely united republic in America's true ideal.

It is interesting to realize the high esteem of George Washington in other lands than ours. In Great Britain he is honored almost as highly as he is in America. In Europe, and throughout the world, his name is known, and the newer republics have found inspiration in his character and wisdom.

America has other and more recent heroes and there will be more in generations to come. But he stands, and will ever stand, as a noble embodiment of all that in his generation was the worthiest in American character. His honor is undimmed, and his name takes on added luster with the passing of the years. Few nations have such a name to stand at the head of their lists of national heroes. America and the world will ever venerate the name of George Washington, the father of his country.

Fly Saves Coconuts

Boulder, Colo.—Down in the South seas a battle in the endless war between man and insects has been fought and won without any report of it coming to northern ears.

To us, for whom coconut means merely a confection, or, if we be a little more chemical minded, oil for soaps and butter substitutes, it is hard to bring home the importance of coconuts for the brown people of the Pacific.

goods. The coconut has been called the most useful tree in the world, at least certainly it is the most useful tree in the tropics.

So when the innumerable sluglike caterpillars of the moth called Ievu-anna began to eat all the leaves off the coconut tree in Fiji, and threatened to spread over the whole South Pacific area, there was consternation. The insect had a host of natural enemies, but they did not seem to be able to make any impression on its swarming numbers.

Then one day the tiny flies of the family tachinidas, a species known as ptychomyia remota, was brought over from the Federation Malay states and turned loose. The tachinids have a pleasant habit of laying their eggs in the eggs of other insects, and the hungry little grubs that hatch out of them live in the world of natural omelet where they first come to larva-hood until they are ready to fly. The natural result is one more tachinid, one fewer caterpillar. Another member of this same family is being tried out most hopefully now in the American corn belt, against the borer.

Ptychomyia made short work of the coconut caterpillar. Within a few months the stripped trees were putting forth new green leaves, young plantations are no longer pestered, and the most prominent industry of the South seas was safe again.

WHERE SHALL HE GO?

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

Falkner's son graduated from high school last June and Falkner is somewhat concerned as to where he should send him to college. There is a junior college in Falkner's town, and if George should go there he could be at home just as he has been while in high school. It would please his mother to have him under her eye, and he could be very much better looked after than if he were down state or in New England.

There is, of course, the big institution and the small college, the coed-educational college, and the college for men only. It is a question rather hard to decide especially when the boy himself is indifferent.

There is, in fact, not so much at stake in making the choice as one might suppose, if mere information and book knowledge is all that should be considered. The boy will be taught one place about as well as another. It is to be supposed that if he is sent to the junior college he will live at home. Now the boy at home is never so independent as if he were a hundred or a thousand miles away. He is seldom if ever allowed fully to exercise his own judgment, to make his own decisions, to come and go as he chooses, and so he loses a good deal of initiative and self-reliance. One learns much by having to stand on his own feet, by making his own mistakes, by living his own life. Only as an economic saving is the junior college best.

As to the merits of the small college as compared with the big one, it is very much like making the choice between the small town and the city. The shy and the unaggressive might be lost in the city, and not be able so easily to find himself in the big university. As to getting more personal attention in the small college than in the larger one, and being taught by men of greater distinction, that is largely a matter of imagination rather than of fact.

The number of students for which an instructor in the big university is responsible is not generally larger than those assigned to an individual in the smaller college. In the big institution the contacts are more cosmopolitan in character. One meets all sorts and conditions of men interested in every line of mental activity and should profit by such intercourse. The moral problems are not different in one institution from those in the other.

One does not solve the problems of sex by sending a boy to a man's college. Radcliffe is next door to Harvard, and Smith is only seven miles from Amherst. They get together no matter where they are sent. It has always been so. Coeducation neither relieves nor increases the difficulty. It is after all a matter largely of personal choice, and in making the decision the preference of the student himself should be given the greatest weight. Wherever he goes, he will very likely think it the best place.

Relic of '76 Must Go

New York.—The relentless march of progress, until recently sparing of the older landmarks, which seemed secure in the remoter regions of Staten Island, shortly will wipe out one of the last remaining relics of Revolutionary days still standing within the limits of the city of New York.

The Black Horse tavern, at the intersection of Amboy and Richmond roads, New Dorp, Staten Island, shortly will be razed to make way for the widening of Richmond road. Condemnation proceedings will be started soon and the building will be razed when the maps are finished and the contracts awarded by the borough of Richmond.

Because the intersection at which the house stands has long been a blind corner and a peril to motorists the improvement contemplated by the city became imperative. A triangular slice of land, it will be cut into two pieces, one part being used to widen Richmond road and the other to form a small plaza.

The old tavern, portions of which have been incorporated into the present building, has been celebrated in many legendary stories of Staten Island history. So legendary are some of these stories that it has been impossible to verify them.

At that moment the house, hitherto unnamed, was christened the Black Horse by fellow officers who witnessed the tragedy.

William T. Davis, Staten Island historian, recalled that for a short period of years prior to the purchase of the building by Patrick Curry it was used as a post office, and residents of the rural districts came from near and far to receive their mail.

It is told, without verification, that

Maj. John Andre, the officer delegated to assist in the treachery of Benedict Arnold, stopped at the Black Horse and executed his will there before starting out on his mission.

The appearance of the place has changed considerably since the days of '76. Additions have been built from time to time, among them a comparatively modern dance hall. The original wooden sign, which bore the figure of a black horse and which is now so weatherbeaten that only the faintest of markings can be discerned, is in the possession of Mrs. Curry, who has refused to part with it despite the pleas of a number of historical societies.

PROOF OF DYES is in the dyeing!
Words won't dye a dress, or coat, or sweater. It takes real anilines to do that. That's why Diamond Dyes contain from three to five times more anilines than any other dye—by actual test.
It's the anilines in Diamond Dyes that do the work: that give the colors such brilliance; such depth and permanence. It's real aniline that keeps them from giving things that re-dyed look; from spotting or streaking.
Next time you have dyeing to do—try Diamond Dyes. Then compare results. See how soft, bright, new-looking the colors are. Observe how they keep their brilliance through wear and washing. Your dealer will refund your money if you don't agree Diamond Dyes are better dyes.
The white package of Diamond Dyes is the original "all-purpose" dye for any and every kind of material. It will dye or tint silk, wool, cotton, linen, rayon or any mixture of materials. The blue package is a special dye, for silk or wool only. With it you can dye your valuable articles of silk or wool with results equal to the finest professional work. When you buy—remember this. The blue package dyes silk or wool only. The white package will dye every kind of goods, including silk and wool. Your dealer has both packages.

Teacher: Willie, where is Toronto?
Willie: Right between Davenport and Pittsburgh.
Teacher: Where did you find that answer?
Willie: On our radio set.

We have just delivered another load of Hexite to John Burgeson this morning.

Cop: How did the accident happen?
Motorist: My wife fell asleep in the back seat.

Wm. Schmalz purchased another load of Hexite. He says it's great feed for milch cows.

Feeds we carry—Corn, cracked corn, oats, ground oats, corn and oat chop, scratch feed, middlings, chicken wheat, Hexite.

Cop: So you saw the accident, sir. What was the number of the car that knocked this man down?

Professor: I am afraid I've forgotten it. But I remember noticing that if it were multiplied by 50 the cube root of the product would be equal to the sum of the digits reversed.

The Smiths had started on their vacation.

"Oh, George," the wife suddenly shrieked, "I forgot to turn off the electric iron."

Secretary: And what shall I do with your mail, Mr. Lincoln?
A. Lincoln: Just forward it to my Gettysburg address.

We are grinding feed every day.

Stranger: Tell me, have any big men ever been born in this city?
Native: No, only babies.

So you are my grandma, are you?
Yes Johnnie, I'm your grandma on your father's side.
Well, you're on the wrong side; you'll soon find that out.

The DAIRY

COW NEEDS CARE IN WINTER TIME

Much of Feed Given Animal Goes for Warmth.

Extra feed cannot be substituted for shelter for the comfortable cow is the profitable cow. When the animals are exposed to wintry winds and rains, much of the feed goes to keep the bodies warm instead of to produce milk.

"Therefore, some effort should be made to keep the dairy cows comfortable during periods of disagreeable weather," says John A. Arey, dairy extension specialist at the North Carolina State college. "Their stalls should be well lighted and properly ventilated but free from air currents. Ventilation is important but should be so arranged as to prevent the air currents from striking the cow's body. This is accomplished by making the sides of the barn or cow shed tight and admitting fresh air through properly arranged windows."

Mr. Arey states that the practice of requiring the cow to wade through mud and ice some distance to get drinking water is too common and too expensive in the dairy industry. Such needless exposure chills the animal and prevents her from drinking the amount of water that she normally would consume.

Normal milk, says Mr. Arey, contains 87 per cent water and a cow producing around 30 pounds of milk daily will need from 85 to 90 pounds of water each day. She will not drink this much on a cold day unless the supply is convenient and not too cold.

The dairy cow of high producing breeds is a creature of habit. Unusual treatment makes her nervous. If she is accustomed to a regular routine of feeding and care, a change from this system will make her nervous and distrustful. She should never be run with horses or dogs nor treated roughly while being put in a barn. No other farm animal, says Mr. Arey, will give greater returns for good care than the cow and the herdsmen who keeps his animals comfortable in winter will be amply repaid.

Calf Scours Prevented by Giving Proper Feed

Ordinary scours in young calves are caused by indigestion resulting from overfeeding, or feeding milk that is too cold, or feeding it in dirty pails.

When scours come on while the calf is nursing the cow it gets too much milk, or the milk of the dam is too rich, which may be the case with Jerseys. When scours occur while the calf is fed milk it is usually due to feeding too much milk or feeding it in dirty pails.

The best way to handle a case of ordinary scours is to reduce the amount of milk to about one-half the amount the calf should have. Until the bowels become normal. An ounce or two of castor oil will help to clear the bowels.

If the calf is hand-fed it should have six to eight pounds of milk at a feeding, which must always be fed in clean pails. It is very essential in feeding young calves to weigh the milk at each feeding to avoid overfeeding.

When a calf gets clean, wholesome milk and is not overfed you will have very little trouble with ordinary scours.

Dairy Hints

Oats straw is a very poor feed for dairy cows. If you can cut the corn fodder it will be eaten better by the cows than oats straw.

It is just as possible to overfeed a cow as it is to underfeed, although it is more uncommon. One extreme is just as unprofitable as the other.

People who have been underfeeding their cows generally go to the other extreme whenever they are convinced that their present method of feeding is not correct.

The calf should receive the first milk or colostrum from its mother. Colostrum is thick, very yellow in color, and contains nearly six times the amount of protein contained in ordinary milk.

Dishcloths fail to reach the cracks and crevices where dirt and bacteria are prone to lodge; they fail to cut grease and dirt, and it is almost impossible to keep them in a sweet, sanitary condition.

Underfeeding of dairy cows, occurring especially during the winter months, is one of the most common reducers of profits for the dairy farmer. Overfeeding, however, may be just as unprofitable.

Every dairy farmer should provide himself with a milk house to be used exclusively for the handling of milk and milk products. In building a milk house, do not place it too near the stable. Make it an entirely separate building with sufficient window space. Sunlight is a good disinfectant.

ORCHARD GLEANINGS

BIG DIFFERENCE IN FRUIT PROFITS

Limiting Production Should Be by Less Acreage.

The fruit grower has a different set of problems, but in many ways the same procedure should be followed as that the wise general farmer uses, says the Illinois Farmer.

Costs per bushel or per package of fruit bear a very close relationship to the production per tree and per acre. It costs no more to spray a tree with 20 bushels of apples on it than it does to spray a tree the same size with five bushels on it. The pruning of the two trees also costs the same amount. The cultivation costs the same per tree, the same amount of fertilizer was given each. The amount of taxes each should bear was the same. Each should bear the same share of interest charges which the business pays out.

These charges on the tree which has 20 bushels of apples may amount to 15 cents a bushel. On the tree with five bushels on they would be 60 cents a bushel.

There is the other class of charges which does not change per bushel with the size of the crop such as the charge for the package and the cost of picking, packing, hauling to the car and such. These costs may be about 50 cents a bushel. This class added to the other, on the tree which yielded 20 bushels gives a total cost of 65 cents as a result. On the tree which yielded only five bushels the total cost is $1.10.

The significance of this in a year of poor prices is at once strikingly apparent. Any price between 65 cents and $1.10 is a profitable price in one case and extremely unprofitable in the other.

Thus while it is necessary to limit production of horticultural products it must be done not on the basis of smaller yields per acre but decreasing the acreages.

This should be kept in mind by the fruit grower when he is urged to reduce his production. If he has more orchard than he can care for properly the ideal chance exists to eliminate a few unprofitable blocks whose average yield per acre is low and increase the yield on the better blocks. Even if the result is a stationary production his profits will show a good increase.

Nematodes Attack Roots of Young Orchard Trees

In sandy or sandy loam soils nematodes (eel worms) are frequently found and attack the roots of young orchard trees, causing small knots to appear on them. Trees so affected are usually weak and die before they come into bearing. Occasionally trees come from the nursery with knots (nematodes) on the roots, and under no condition should such trees be planted. When the orchard site has been selected the roots of the crop growing in the soil there should be examined to determine whether the soil is infested with nematodes. If knots are found on the roots of these plants a new orchard site must be selected.

Horticultural Notes

Fruit trees that are expected to produce a good crop of fruit should be watered from time to time for best results.

Any rabbit will eat apple tree bark when snow is deep and food scarce, and when rabbits are plentiful under such conditions, look out!

Where a tree has been girdled to the extent that the top dies, it is best to let a sprout start from below, and later graft this or plant new trees.

The grape should be pruned in the fall, early winter, or at least before early spring, to prevent excessive "bleeding" caused by pruning in the late spring.

Strawberries are set out in April or early May. If plants are dry when received from the nursery, dip them in water and place in a cool, moist place for a few hours before planting.

The autumn-fruiting or so-called everbearing raspberries can be recommended only as a novelty for the home garden. The autumn crop is usually light, the quality is not high, and the berries are often poorly developed.

Berry patches and asparagus beds make a good poultry range at certain seasons. The plants furnish shade and the poultry helps to keep down the weeds. A small hole in the garden fence next to a poultry range is a great help in fighting garden pests.

Farmers who have young orchards and are bothered with rabbits and other vermin gnawing their trees will do well to save the blood of hogs or beef. If the trunks of the trees are washed with this blood, nothing will bother them.

Prefer Elephants to Tractors in Congo

How supposedly untamable African elephants are trained by Belgian Congo officials to become farm servants, each equivalent to a tractor "plus," is disclosed by members of a Harvard expedition recently returned from Africa.

The "plus" in the elephant's favor is that after doing a day's work equivalent to that of a tractor he gathers his food free of cost in the forest, where it grows wild, while the gasoline "feed" of tractors is expensive in the Congo.

African elephants long had a reputation for incurable ferocity, and the accomplishment of the Belgians in learning how to domesticate them is new. The successful training is due to catching the elephants young. Numbers of them have been given to settlers for farm work.

Compromising Question

Representative Bulwinkle of North Carolina told a campaign story at a Gastonia banquet.

"Up north," he said, "a young colored girl made her way into a registration booth.

"Ah wants ter vote," she said, and she began to giggle.

"What party do you affiliate with?" said the clerk.

"Suh!" She looked indignant and rolled her eyes. "Suh!"

"What party do you affiliate with, I asked you."

"Does Ah have ter tell dat?"

"You sure do, sister."

"Den Ah won't vote nohow. Why, de party wot Ah filiate wiv hain't even got his divo'ce yet!"

The Germ Received

A man came alone to the neighbor's house on an errand.

"Why didn't you bring the wife along and spend the evening?" asked the friend.

"Oh, she has caught the germ again," replied the disgruntled husband.

"Flu, I suppose?" said the solicitous neighbor.

"No, the malady is gardenitis. She received a new seed catalogue today," was the distressed husband's lament.

When Food Sours

Lots of folks who think they have "indigestion" have only an acid condition which could be corrected in five or ten minutes. An effective anti-acid like Phillips Milk of Magnesia soon restores digestion to normal.

Phillips does away with all that sourness and gas right after meals. It prevents the distress so apt to occur two hours after eating. What a pleasant preparation to take! And how good it is for the system! Unlike a burning dose of soda—which is but temporary relief at best—Phillips Milk of Magnesia neutralizes many times its volume in acid.

Next time a hearty meal, or too rich a diet has brought on the least discomfort, try—

Help Kidneys By Drinking More Water

Take Salts to Flush Kidneys and Help Neutralize Irritating Acids

Kidney and bladder irritations often result from acidity, says a noted authority. The kidneys help filter this acid from the blood and pass it on to the bladder, where it may remain to irritate and inflame, causing a burning, scalding sensation, or setting up an irritation at the neck of the bladder, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night. The sufferer is in constant dread; the water passes sometimes with a scalding sensation and is very profuse; again, there is difficulty in voiding it.

Bladder weakness, most folks call it because they can't control urination. While it is extremely annoying and sometimes very painful, this is often one of the most simple ailments to overcome. Begin drinking lots of soft water, also get about four ounces of Jad Salts from your pharmacist and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast. Continue this for two or three days. This will help neutralize the acids in the system so they no longer are a source of irritation to the bladder and urinary organs, which then act normal again.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, and is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is used by thousands of folks who are subject to urinary disorders caused by acid irritation. Jad Salts causes no bad effects whatever.

Here you have a pleasant, effervescent lithia-water drink which may quickly relieve your bladder irritation.

Mother and Baby Gain Health, Strength and Flesh

"I am so grateful for what Milks Emulsion has done for me that I am writing you this letter."

"I had a terrible cough and for four months was so weak that I had to rest on the bed several times while dressing. In fact, after putting on one stocking I would have to lie down and rest before putting the other on. People thought I had tuberculosis, but they don't think so now. I was so weak that I could not care for my baby, who was not getting sufficient nourishment to give him any strength. But after taking your Emulsion for a few months I regained my health and now I weigh 145 pounds. My baby is one year old and weighs 30 pounds. We are both in perfect health and we thank Milks Emulsion for it.
