choosing one of the nobby straw-andfelt types which are the outstanding theme among milliners at present.

This interworking of felt with straw is offering to the designer an endless opportunity to express "ideas." Many of the straws are elaborated with felt inserts and appliques or vice versu. This treatment is intricately carried out for the first hat in the picture. In this instance black felt is cleverly patterned with scissors, the cutout work appliqued on a softly draped straw. With the addition of a simple ornament, this model becomes a most beguiling exponent of the straw with felt types which lead in spring millinery displays.

An entirely different handling of felt with straw is that given to the cloche effect just below Here the crown is straw, natural colored bakou, with felt forming the face-framing prim. brought to an effective bow trim at one side.

A smart interpretation of the straw and-felt theme is presented in the model

The tendency to trim with flowers is making definite appeal to stylists who see in floral treatments a new ap proach to lovely effects.

In the picture, flowers are featured as an integral part of dress decora tion. The mode to the left shows a distinctly new idea-a "flower garter dress." Two rose-colored flowers form the trimming on this black satin din ner dress. The third flower is at tached to a band of satin in such a way that it shows when the wearer

Matching flowers adorn the bodice.

Novel flower treatments on chiffon frocks of gay flower print add in terest to less formal modes. The idea is to repeat the flowers patterned on the chiffon. If large roses are the fabric motif then roses of similar shape and color are worn as a corsage If the flowers themselves are not duplicated then at least the colorings in the prints are reproduced in the outonniere.

By LESTER B. COLBY

Terreno de conservações de co Lafcadio Hearn-The Misfit

CHARLES B. HEARN was an Irishman in whose blood a strain of gypsy flowed. We meet him, briefly, in the 1840's. He is a surgeon-major in the British army. His regiment is stationed somewhere in the Mediterranean. Gypsy and Celtic blood, with an infusion of Latin, probably, for the-French and Spanish have traded for centuries with Ireland. Hot blood when love surges

Rosa Cerigote, a Greek girl of charm and beauty, catches the young surgeon-major's eye. He is in garrison, gayly uniformed and the wines are good. One night he carries her off, by main force, and marries hercave man stuff.

Thus another chapter in Americana-

A son is born to them on the island of Lafcada in 1850. They name him Lafcadio Hearn. Years pass, the child grows. Dr. Charles B. Hearn returns to Ireland taking with him his wife Rosa and the boy. But soon after Lafcadio is six years old themother runs away. We do not see her again. The father also vanishes out of the picture.

Lafcadio falls into the hands of wealthy relatives. They raise him in castle halls. He has fine raiment, money to spend, everything. Finally he is placed in a good Catholic school. They have great hopes for him. He is: brilliant, brainy. Perhaps, some day,

Suddenly Lafcadio turns rebellious. He storms at the laws the church lays: down. He announces that he is not a Christian. He says he cannot believe the Bible. To the consternation of those who have showered their blessings upon him he walks out. He

In the flight of time Lafcadio Hearn appears again. He is in Cincinnati, in America, down on the Ohio river. And he is in poverty. Lafeadio, the misfit. He is somewhat mature now; a short, squat man, swarthy and with large bulbous eyes-like those of a telescope fish. One eye is blind and there are white blotches over it. Lafcadio Hearn, who has a gift for infinite detail, is proofreader on a Cincinnati newspaper. Dull stuff he reads. He can do better than that. So he begins to write.

When Lafcadio Hearn writes, men stop instantly to read. Few writers have ever attained so quick and spectacular a success. He seems certain to rise to great heights. But suddenly-Perhaps there is something primitive that stirs his blood. It seems that civilization and savagery are always at conflict within him. Nosooner does his station appear assured than he, in one of his expeditions out of higher realms, meets a Octaroon she is, black blood in her veins. And this in Cincinnati, too. Lafcadio Hearn announces that he will marry her. His position on the newspaper is gone. Hunger is soon with him. He travels down the river, to Memphis, and the girl whose skin is pastel shade, is left behind. And that is that. The old Cordova bar. Gayoso street, these and other things; stone steps worn into holes ankle deep by innumerable feet. That was Memphis in those days Then, in 1861, he is in New Orleans. He is broke and hungry, too. He gets a job on the Item. Soon a series of wonderful stories begins. They are intimate romances dealing with Creole, Spanish, French and negro life. He becomes prolific. He starts to translating early European writers-Maupassant, Pierre Loti, Flaubert, Tolstoy, Zola, Coppee, Daudet, Baudelaire-many others. The man is clever, extremely so. The literary world applauds.

European literature skimmed of its cream, he turns to the Orient. Here he finds a field of entrancing color and amazing richness. Harper's sends nim to Japan. He decides to stay there. He becomes teacher of English in the University of Tokyo. He marries a Japanese woman, Setsuko Kaizumi, and fathers two sons.

Students of literature say no Occidental ever knew the Orient as Hearn. He gives us "Out of the East," "Chinese Ghosts," "Glimpses of Unfamiliar Japan," "Shadowings," "The Romance of the Milky Way." and many others. He is said to have once remarked to a friend:

"I have always had a distaste for the Anglo-Saxon and his culture; never could fully comprehend his morals. I love the Latins and the Orientals. If I had my choice I would live among the Latins and be buried in a Buddhist graveyard."

Two ancient bells, said to have been used by St. Patrick and other Irish saints. Now preserved in the National museum in Dublin. By ELMO SCOTT WATSON L of us know that March 17 is St. Patrick's day and most of us, whether we be of Irish ancestry or not, celebrate the day in some fashion or other. We may do it by adding a touch of green to our costume on lapel, for both the green means settled to satisfy all. "As for this country, the wily florist can sell almost any small member of the clover family to credulous Hibernians. If it is green and has three leaves, he can label it 'shamrock' and be sure that it will not remain on his many of us know just why we celebrate the day or how much truth

there is in the mass of legendary lore which has gathered around the name of this man who for ages has been regarded as the patron saint of all

In the first place, many people have the idea that March 17 is celebrated as the anniversary of his birth. It is, however, the anniversary of his death, and is his feast day instead of his birthday. There is dispute as to the facts of the dates of his birth and death. According to some, he was born about 387 A. D. and died about 493 A. D., making him one hundred six years of age at his death. Others assert positively that he died about 461 A. D., although all agree that nationality and the place of his birth.

The latter is variously given as Scotland, England and France, with the strongest évidence pointing to his having been born at a place caleld Kilnatrick near Dumbarton on the River

Clyde in Scotland, although it is pretty definitely established that he was of Celt ancestry. Although he is called St. Patrick, there are those who would east doubt upon his right to that title by saying that he was never canonized and proclaimed a saint in Rome. But the fact that he has always been venerated as the chief

Church of Rome itself is regarded as Ever since that time the shamrock has been the traditional emblem of St. Patrick and of the Irish race, but according to botanists no one can be sure just what was the plant which

St. Patrick used to illustrate his teachings and which has since been known as the shamrock. Some assert that it was the common white clover, native to nearly all parts of northern Europe and northeastern United States, which is sometimes called the ample reason for his title.

Then there is the matter of his shelves after March 17.' Several years ago a Dublin newspaper addressed a questionnaire to a large number of representative men in Ireland for the purpose of obtaining their views on the identity of the shamrock. Nearly all of the replies favored white clover.

This plant, known to botanists as Trifolium repens, would seem to fit admirably the traditional role that has been ascribed to it. It occurs everywhere in Ireland, in pastures, in lawns and along roadsides. From late spring until early winter its leaf, made up of three leaflets, and its cheery blossoms, white with a touch of red or brown, growing in masses close to the ground, may everywhere

Although a wild plant, it enters prominently into the life and well-being of the Irish people. Ireland is predominantly an agricultural country. The dominant characteristic of its agriculture is the raising of live stock on pastures. The best pastures are those in which the wild white clover is most abundant.

As a result of experiments carried on not only in Ireland but also in England, Scotland and other countries of northern Europe, it is now generally recognized that applications of lime and some material carrying phosphoric acid are almost sure to increase the growth of white clover in the pasture and thereby add to its carrying capacity.

In our own country, too, the same white clover is of importance. Soon after the pioneer cleared the land of forest trees, white clover began to work into his grass lands. So universal was this that the Indians referred to the plant as the "white man's foot grass." Wherever the white man set his foot, the white clover grew. Today it is a prominent and valuable part of our pastures and its myriad white blossoms dot, our grass lands devoted to lawns, parks and golf courses. Thus does tradition touch modern life.

One of the most charming legends connected with St. Patrick is the association of his name with that of St. Brigid, and James Stephens, an Irishman who is a noted writer, tells that story in the New York Times as fol-

According to the Irish calendar, the second day of February is the first day of spring, and it is also the feast day of St. Brigid (pronounced Breed).

There has never been a period when a personage of this name was not in Ireland. In very ancient times Brigid was the goddess of poetry. In less ancient times, by a shocking but logical declension, she became the goddess of war; and in the comparatively recent day which represents the year 1 of this era she became the respected patron of the new religion and the beloved "Mary of the Gael"

Corry admit that the question is by Poets, soldiers, saints—these are great travelers. By creating, destroying, preserving, they accomplish the work of the world; and, like the Siva of another mythology, our Brigid seems to have been mistress of the three great the three divine—qualities.

She was traveling in the east of the world and came to an overcrowded little town; and as she went from place to place seeking shelter she came to a stable and went in. A man and woman were there before her, and the woman was in the pangs of childbirth. It was Brigid who helped her and it was in Brigid's cloak that the Child was born. Hence she is known as Brigid of the Mantle, as the Foster Mother of Christ and as, after Mary, His Best Beloved. Then the years rolled on and she went from this world. Then the years surged again, 430 of them, and St Patrick came to Ireland; and then, after the passage of some more years,

The scene of this tale next changes to Heaven itself. Brigid and Patrick were walking together. They were, God help them, talking about Ireland, one asking the other had he or she ever been to Connemara; the other asking the one if she or he remembered the Dingle peninsula, and how it looked in storm. Or the Ben of Gulbain seen with the moon alight. Or yon basket full of lakes, where each lake dared any other to be as beautiful and every pool in Ireland lifted the challenge.

tablished in the country that he loved,

Be sure the two saints assured each other, or perhaps even reassured each other, in the faith that, after all, Heaven was prettier than Ireland.

Their walk had been a long one, and, immersed in (as Sean O'Casey would say) darling memories, they had reached a place which the saints care but rarely to visit. They had come to the Seat of Judgment.

There the Judge sat, vaster than Vastness, blacker than Blackness; imnovable, unescapable, terrific.

St. Brigid did not dislike Rhadamanthus for that would be a sin. But she did not like him, for he had never been to Ireland nor even had he ex-pressed a desire to go there. As hor gaze fell on him and off him a terrible thought caused her to look at him again—at his blank, black vastness, at his supersolid solidity. She saw his great hand move this way and yon as, like black lightning, he scrutinized this and that being who groveled and screamed at his awful brow. "He," said St. Brigid, and she was astounded as she said k, "he would send even an Irishman to hell!" "He would," said St. Patrick, but even as he said it he went icy with horror, for the thought had never before struck him.

The Judge looked toward them.

The Judge looked toward them.
I'm will not have it so," said St. Brigid, and she spoke the words, as it were,
into that all-sighted, implacable eye.
She drew St. Patrick with her, away.

They went to her Foster Child and she obtained from Him, who loved her this concession—that every person who came from Ireland should be judged by St. Patrick himself and not by Rhadamanthus. "You will be very careful," whe said to St. Patrick. "Surely, I will," the great saint answered.

"But if," said St. Brigid, and the very heart within her was shocked, "but if a bad Irishman is brought before you—"
"I'll convert him," said St. Patrick.

'Tis but one of the reasons why Irishmen, of whatever religious or political complexion, pledge St. Patrick when his day comes round and why they may all be fearless of the world to come.

But I, an apprentice in the craft that Patrick loved and of which he was the patron, am desolated to think that perhaps St. Brigid is not getting her share of the praise.

Trimming the Expense

A man and his wife were interested in a machine and were about to buy when the salesman decided to emphasize the merits of the car. He dwelt on the many outstanding features, and to end his talk he added.

"We will put the initials of the owner on in special design."

The wife hurriedly pulled her husband aside and exclaimed: "John, don't let him do that because He presently repented, because he did not know where to find another model so well suited to his purpose. "Seeing her so torn, bruised and swollen, I thought that even if she did return to me, she must of necessity be treated for 15 days before I could make any use of her. .

SPRING PASTURE IS NOT HARMFUL

North Carolina Finds Milk

Is Richer in Butterfat.

It's mostly tradition, and not facts, that leads many dairymen to believe that the quality of milk depreciates when the cows are turned from the dry feed of the stable to the succulent green feed of the pasture.

"Yet we have a few dairymen and many consumers who believe this," says I'red M. Haig of the animal husbandry department at the North Carolina state college. "We have just completed a test with nine cows in the herd here at the college which shows that instead of the animals giving a lower quality of milk in the spring, it is materially richer in butterfat.'

Last winter, Professor Haig selected nine cows and fed them cottonseed hulls as the sole roughage for a period of ten weeks. No succulent feed was given during the period. The average daily milk production was 201.0 pounds testing 464 per cent fat.

The cows were then changed from the hulls to corn silage and hay and, after giving time to accustom themselves to the change, the same data was again collected. With this feed, each cow of the nine produced 209.1 pounds of milk per day testing 4.88 per cent fat.

On May 4, the nine cows were turned on a rich pasture consisting of green wheat and crimson clover. Again they were allowed time to adjust themselves and the data again collected. The average daily production in this case was 212.9 pounds of milk each day testing 5.37 per cent

Throughout each of these three tests, the grain ration remained constant and supplied a balanced ration. However, this shows that silage is better than the dry feed and a good pasture is better than silage. Professor Haig states that succulent feed is important in the dairy business not only for the maintenance of healthy cows but also for the amount and quality of milk produced.

To Secure Best Results From Bull Feed Wisely

In order to secure the best results with the bull, it is necessary that he be fed very carefully in order that he does not become too fat and sluggish, therefore a poor breeder.

In feeding the mature bull, a very satisfactory grain ration can be made up of: One hundred pounds ground corn, 50 pounds wheat bran, 40 pounds oats, ten pounds oilmeal, five pounds bonemeal.

It is not often that the bull will need more than two to four pounds of such a grain mixture per day before he is put to service. A two-year-old bull when in service will probably require a pound of such a grain mixture per day for each 100 pounds of live weight; therefore, if he weighs 1,500 pounds he would require 15 pounds of grain per day if in good condition; but if thin, would probably require 18 to 20 pounds per day while being used. Mature bulls should have just enough grain to keep them in good, vigorous condition but not too fat. Mature bulls often become slow breeders when they become fat.

As a general thing a limited amount of corn silage may be allowed to the mature bull, but generally not over a half feed such as 15 or 20 pounds per day. Along with the silage a mature bull can usually have all the alfalfa or clover hay he will eat without waste. Most authorities claim that heavy feeding of silage makes the bull a slow breeder.

 Dairy Notes **************

Good milk can be produced only with cleanliness in its handling.

Milk your cows immediately before instead of after feeding them and you will avoid off-flavors.

Giving your dairy barn a good system of ventilation now means healthier stock and purer milk in the winter.

A bull pen where the bull can run in either a shed or out into an exercise lot is an excellent investment on any dairy farm.

Cowpea hay is an excellent feed for dairy cows, containing somewhat more digestible protein than alfalfa and clover and practically the same amount of total digestible nutrients.

Warmth and fresh air are primary needs inside a dairy barn. The animal heat given off by the cows is the only practical means of providing warmth.

While cattle losses from tuberculosis have been cut in half in the past ten years, losses from contagious abortion have doubled in the same period.

Good pasture, good legume hay, good ground grain will make a good cow do her best, provided you let her have plenty of good drinking water at all

Broom-Making Lags

The broom industry of the United States declined 15.1 per cent in 1927 over 1925, according to a bulletin of the Department of Commerce, just issued. The figures indicate that the total value of the products of broomcorn manufacture fell off from $21,-714,194 to $17,934,413 and the number of plants manufacturing brooms from

In obedience to the note of a siren on an approaching plane the mechanical man turned on the flood lights at the Newark airport without the aid of human hands.

Mr. Televox, whose name freely translated, from the Greek and Latin means "distant voice," demonstrated his ability as an airfield attendant when in repeated tests he flooded the new airport with 24,000,000 candle power in response to the distant voice of a plane high in the air.

Pete Branson, air mail pilot, approached the field from various directions and at different altitudes in the test, turning on a wind-driven siren as he neared. Each time the sound of the siren reached the field, the mechanical man flashed on the lights.

The device which gives Mr. Televox the similitude of human response to sound is the combination of two recent inventions, the Knowles gridglow and a vibrating reed selector. The vibrations set up in the reed

DIPPING INTO SCIENCE

* Why No Water in the Sun

Water is a compound of hydrogen and oxygen. These two elements are present in the sun. Why, therefore, is there no water in the sun? Because the intense heat prevents the two from combining. This is easily understood when we consider that we ourselves can force the hydrogen and oxygen of water apart with intense heat.

cations of a civilization more pretentious than that of present day natives. Still other evidences of former days were uncovered during the summer by the Stoll-McCracken expedition of the American Museum of National History.

Stone implements found by Geist were uncovered where there had been a dirt slide on the north shore of St. Lawrence island. He said the axes reminded him of those used by prehistoric people in upper Ba of the island Eskimos had seen anything like them, nor did they know what they were. "Perhaps the age of these axes corresponds with the age of the human bodies excavated by Mr. Collins on Punock island," Geist said. "These bodies were found several feet below sea level. Since there is a jumbled mass of rock with cavelike rooms directly above this slide and there are several others near the site, I have advanced the theory that the makers of the axes perhaps lived in them and were real cave men."

As far back as my memory goes we were not considered too young to be taken to the morning service, but no foolishness was allowed, no conversation could be indulged in. We might go to sleep upon mother's arm if the sand man scattered too much dust in our eyes, but if we cried we were taken out and given the attention which such irregularities or derelictions merited. Children were not supposed to cry or to attract public attention in the old days, though they were much more frequently seen in public gatherings than at the present time, and somewhat more under parental control, I

The music started up again, and the whole throng began to dance. They danced in the oddest sort of way, too. I don't mean that they danced in an old-fashioned way. Any way but old-fushioned would have been odd-even odder than the fact that they were dancing at all. Fancy an Eighteenth-century ghost dancing the turkey trot or the tango No! They danced the right dances, even if they did dance them to ragtime. But what I couldn't understand was the care they seemed to take to keep within a sort of triangular space. They did it almost as accurately as if they were following lines on the floor.

I'm mentioning all this now, just as I mentioned it to Josephine later when she said I had dreamed the whole thing. Fancy anyone dreaming a triangular dance. It isn't done, you

I watched and wondered. The music was catchy and my own feet began to keep step to it. With terror I realized that in another minute I would probably find myself out in the middle of the throng. On consideration I did not mind so very much. To dance with Eighteenth-century spooks at an Eightteenth-century ball would be something to tell about-if I survived, of course if the ghosts didn't blight me where I stood the minute I appeared. Then I looked down at my wrapper and at my stockingless feet and decided to have mercy on the ghosts and not scare them to death. I was beginning to feel quite flippant about this time. The fact was I didn't believe that they were really truly

Don't ask me what I did believe. was too excited to believe anything. I didn't trouble to bunt for explanations. Ghosts were good enough for

Then all of a sudden comething happened. Several things happened, in fact." First, I saw Perkins, just as natural as when I had seen him a few hours before. He wasn't in Eighteenth-cen' ry costume and he wasn't dancing. He was watching the danc ers and thrusting his long neck out and drawing it back again as if he were an automatic doll. It was perfectly preposterous that he should be there, but there ne was,

Then suddenly I realized that he was watching some one among the dancers. His neck was swinging rythmically in tune to the music, but his head was turning so that his eyes could range slowly clong the moving

It didn't take long to discover who he was watching. And when I did discover I nearly dropped. He was watching the ghosts that Josephine and I had seen on the lawn. There they were, dressed to the very minute (in Eighteenth-century clothes, of course). I knew the man instantly and I was pretty sure of the woman. I could not be quite sure; for I couldn't see her face clearly. Almost she seemed to be hiding it.

Then something drew my eyes to where, a little in front of Perkins and to one side, half a dozen big plants in tubs stood close to the apex of the triangle. Some one was crouching between those plants. I couldn't see who it was or whether it was a man ghost or a woman ghost, but I could see that it was some one.

As I watched, the couple that Perkins was watching danced up to the very point of the triangle and stood, balancing, as if hesitating which way to go. The woman's back was toward Perkins, and he was craning his long neck every which way as if in an effort to see her face.

I don't think he saw it. He didn't have time. For at that moment something happened. The man croucking between the plants was pushing out into the room. I saw him distinctly and I didn't understand why other people didn't see him, too. But apparently they didn't. He took one step, then two, then with a rush he fairly hurled himself upon the couple that Perkins was watching. He grabbed the man with one hand and flung him aside. And then grabbed the woman with the other hand and hugged her. And she hugged him back. For a moment they stool still, plainly revealed in the hissing lights; and I saw their faces. It was Mr. Braxton and Miss Labert. There could be no doubt about it. I knew them instantly. Mr. Braxton wasn't dressed like the others, exactly, nor yet as I had last seen him. But it was he, all right. And yet I knew as well as I knew anything that Mr. Braxton was lying in a room in the other part of the building with a broken arm, three broken ribs, and an ankle in splints! And he seemed to enjoy that hug so! And so did Mrs. James were burrying across the room toward me.

My heart sank like lead and I suppose my mouth dropped open. I knew I stood spellbound. I couldn't have moved or spoken to save my life. (When I told this to Josephine she insisted that it proved that I was just having a nightmare.) And I don't think she meant to insinuate that for me not to be able to speak would be a nightmare in itself. It wouldn't be a bit like Josephine to insinuate anything like that. Josephine is always sweet and nice. It's I who am the spiteful member of the Dinsmore

If I were spellbound the ghosts were not; or, if they were, they came from under the spell mighty quickly. With one accord they flung themselves at Mr. Braxton and the minx he was hugging. It was the most cowardly thing I ever saw-thirty men jumping at one.

Mr. Braxton didn't wait for them. He was too wise for that. He just dived between the plants and disappeared. And he took Miss Labert with him. The hussy!

And Perkins dived after them. Fancy Perkins diving! But he did.

This broke my spell, too. I burst through the doors with a shriek. All the ghosts faced toward me. For an instant I saw all their faces transfixed with rage and fury-transfixed is the word, I think. Then the lights went out, and I was left in utter darkness, without a soul near-except the ghosts, of course, and they weren't what you'd call real company.

"Happened?" | Screamed, "Happened; a Whole Covey of Ghosts Happened.

This was too much for me. shrieked again and fainted, for the first time in my life.

When I came too I was lying on a sofa in the ballroom and somebody was bending over me. I did not open my eyes at once, but I could see through my eyelids that the room was dimly lighted with a soft golden glow that was very different from the harsh white refulgence that had filled it a moment before. It was very soothing; and for a moment I was content to lie perfectly still, just as if I were asleep. Then, very close to me. I felt some one stir and heard a man's voice speaking under his breath. "Poor little girl," he murmured, "it was an outrage to frighten you so. Oh, you little darling!' Then the first thing I knew a pair of mustached lips swept my forehead.

Naturally, I began to open my eyes. It seemed to be nigh time. Then I decided to wait a little. Never mind what I decided to wait for. I just waited. Then I heard Josephine's voice away off, as If at the ballroom door, and I knew there wouldn't be any encore. So I opened my eyes slowly and looked up.

"Where am 1?" I asked plaintively. As nearly as I could recollect this was what one ought to say when one comes out of a faint. Mr. Braxton-oh. yes, it was Mr. Braxton who was standing beside me -Mr. Braxton turned quickly back from the door toward which he was looking. "Don't be frightened." he said. "It's all right." "I'm not frightened," I said. "Not now, anyhow, though I was for a Then I sat up and looked about me.

The room looked just as it had looked the day before. There was no sign of a ghost anywhere. Mr. something, had been up there—some-Braxton - in his shirtsleeves - was thing real, not a ghost. standing by me, and Josephine and.

Accidents in Air Not Mi. Braxton turned back to Jose-the Fault of Planes Official figures from Washington scream," he explained, "and ran in throw a flood light on the cause of to see what was the matter and found aviation accidents. Half of the mishaps are due to the pilots, one quarter to defects in the airplanes and the other quarter to general conditions. This should help to set at rest the common belief that airplanes have not been developed to a reasonable degree of safety. Reckless or incompetent pilots and lack of proper landing fields are to blame for three out of every four accidents.

If figures were available to show the number of accidents that befall first-class plants operated by responsible companies and manned by seasoned pilots, the total would be astonishingly small. The rarity of accidents to the United States mail planes illustrates, perhaps best of all, the high factor of safety that can be attained in air navigation.-New York American.

Mrs. Margaret Washington Tells

How to Get Rid of a Severe Cold

"Last August I took a very severe cold and it seemed that I couldn't break it up. I got so bad that I was confined to my bed for five weeks, doctoring all the time without getting any relief. I had no appetite, naturally lost flesh. In fact, I had given up all hopes of ever getting any better.
"A friend recommended Milks Emulsion and I commenced its use. When able to leave my bed I weighed 111 pounds. Now, after taking Milks Emulsion five weeks, I weigh 125 pounds, feel better than I have felt in two years, can eat anything, have no effects of the cold and work every day. I thank God and Milks Emulsion for restoring my health." MRS. MARGA-RET WASHINGTON, 1699 E. 14th St., Winston-Salem, N. C. Sold by all druggists under a guar-

Observations From Height

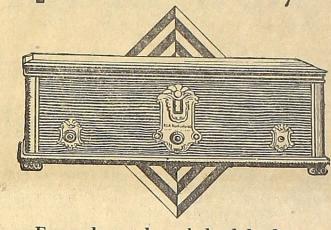

The highest trustworthy meteorological observation that has been made was at Pavia, Italy, December 7, 1911, in a sounding balloon, which rose 35, 000 meters, or 21.77 miles. The record height of an observation from a captive balloon is 9,200 meters, or 5.7 miles. A captive balloon may be sent only as high as the length of the wires or ropes holding it.

Here's a delicious, energy food for Men who do hard, outdoor Work

THE energy to work hard comes from the calories in the food we eat.

Karo is a delicious food—but quite as important, it is a great energy-giving food.

There are 120 calories per ounce in Karo.

Karo immediately supplies muscular energy.

No digestive effort is required as in the case of many other staple foods.

Karo has almost twice the energy value of eggs, lean · beef, weight for weight—and it costs less, too.

Serve lots of delicious Karo-to the entire familyespecially to the children.

Keep them all strong, healthy and happy.

Great Novel Writers "Dubs" in Limericks

ist and poet, George Meredith, amusing himself at the end of his days and cheating infirmities by composing "limericks" in the vain hope of winning one of the prizes offered by vendors of commodities for the best "limericks" advertising their goods, is given by Anthony Hope, in his book, "Memoirs and Notes."

Hope, Israel Zangwill and Herbert Trench were appointed a deputation representing the Society of Authors to go down to Box Hill and congratulate Meredith, president of the society, on his eightieth birthday in 1908. The then "limerick" craze was mentioned during the conversation, and Hope confessed that he had tried his hand at writing them without success.

Earth's Big Bulge

As the earth's crust is by no means rigid it rises and falls under the gravitational attraction of the moon and sun in a manner similar to that of the ocean's tide. Various difficulties have so far prevented exact measurements.

The pressure exerted on spots of the earth's crust by the rising tide of the ocean is another thing that makes it heave and fall. Atlantic tides have caused an observed earth bulge eight hundred miles away, and it is thought probable that this influence girdles the world. "I've sent in some, too," said Mere-this in Burleigh township, co-opercommissioner. He did a fine job of grading. This plan is valuable as the commissioner receives expert advice on the building of road
