

The Spirit of Easter

ASTER is almost here! What is the spirit of Easter? This red letter day on our calendar, which we observe this year on March 31, has a number of different symbols, any one of which may remind us of that day, for all of them are based upon the same fundamental principle. To the Christian world, it is the anniversary of the resurrection of Jesus. But that does not mean that the essential spirit of Easter means something to one part of humanity, set off from the remainder by a religious belief, and that they have a monopoly upon the joys of the Easter season. For Easter has a universal significance and the keynote of it lies in the idea of "resurrection."

Look at the word itself—Easter. It is derived from the word East, and East is one of the four cardinal points. It is also the cardinal point which has always been most important in all religious ceremonies of all races and creeds. This is because it is the part of the heavens where the sun is seen to rise—the sun, bringer of light and heat, the very giver of life itself! The most primitive intelligence of the most primitive man recognized the fact that the sun and life were inseparably associated and it was only natural that when he came to worship the thing which was greater than he, he should turn to the East whence came that greater and higher thing which he recognized as being the life-giving power.

So each day was to him a cycle of a whole lifetime. In the morning as the sun came up, life came into being. As the sun mounted in the heavens life grew in its lusty youth and increased in power. At its zenith, life, too, was at its highest point. As the sun declined, so life declined into old age, into weakness, until there came darkness, the synonym for death. After a period of darkness, life came again. There was a resurrection and once more, the cycle of a life-time compressed into 24 hours, there was life!

And that, stripped of all the tradition, myth, legend, custom and social practice that has attached itself to Easter, is the spirit of Easter, all concentrated in the one word "resurrection." So Easter has a significance that no other red-letter day on our calendars has and that significance is the significance of one of the fundamental and inevitable facts of existence. It is conceivable that all other red-letter days may be abolished from our calendars, that the calendar itself may be done away with. But, no matter what may happen, so long as human life exists on this earth, the spirit of Easter will survive. When it ends, then ends all hope for mankind, all reason for mankind's struggle to exist.

If "resurrection" is the spirit and the message of Easter, then the inmost essence of that spirit can be summed up in the one word "immortality." If man can find an answer to the old, old question that has troubled him through the ages, the question "Does death end all?" he can find it in the message of Easter. It is reassurance that the struggle to live is worth while and that he does not face a hopeless task. Even if he did not have the comfort of his religion to help him arrive at that belief, he finds it in the mere fact of living. Each day, each year and each lifetime he sees the cycle repeated. The sun comes up in the morning and goes down into darkness at night. But he knows that it will come up again the next morning. Each 24 hours he sees the miracle of resurrection. New life is manifest in the animal and vegetable kingdoms with each recurring spring. It ripens in the heat of summertime and mellows into maturity in the autumn, only to die in the cold of winter. But he knows that life will begin again next spring. Each 12 months he sees the miracle of resurrection. A baby is born, passes through childhood, grows into youth, reaches man's estate and then declines into old age. What if the darkness of death is only a matter of a few years away? He has seen the recurring miracle of resurrection every 24 hours and every 12 months. Why should not man, reasoning logically from this evidence of which he is aware every day of his life, believe that the cycle of a lifetime includes a resurrection just as does the daily cycle and the yearly cycle? He does so believe and from that belief comes his belief in the life everlasting, in immortality.

Perhaps it would be more accurate to say he chooses to believe. For few men, if any, have ever solved the riddle of life to their utter satisfaction. They constantly grope for the truth, seeking, always seeking, the answer to the unsolved problems of life. They have the never-ending longing in their hearts for everlasting life and they choose to believe, and take comfort from the belief, that they shall have it.

So whether he be primitive man or modern, civilized man, whether he be Christian or heathen, the essential spirit of Easter, the message of Easter—the same—it is a message of hope, a message of joy and a promise and a fulfillment in one. That message is delivered to man in many forms. It comes to him in the riot of bird songs which greet the sun on every morning in spring. It comes to him in the greenness of the grass, in the swelling buds on the trees, in the flowers which push their way up through the earth when the warming touch of the sun is laid upon it. It comes to him in the softness of the blue sky, in the fleecy clouds floating above him and in the gentle caress of the breezes that touch his face as he goes forth to start each day's work. It comes to him, too, as he watches young animal life about him—lambs, calves and colts wabbling about unsteadily at first and then, as they gain strength, running around in those funny, awkward, stiff-legged little jumps which are always so fascinating to watch.

It comes to him every minute of the day as Nature, in all her forms, cries out exultingly "Spring has come! Spring has come!" Even if she did not tell him in those words, he would know it himself—in the surge of new strength in his own body, in the quickening of his blood after its winter sluggishness. As he hears the call of spring and the message of Easter he feels the desire to pass the message along. He passes it along in as many ways as it comes to him—in the happy note in his voice as he greets his friends, in the little snatches of song which he finds himself singing and in the effort which he makes constantly to put that message into words.

So in addition to the visible, tangible symbols of Easter, it also has its invisible, intangible symbols. You cannot "see" or "touch" happiness, but you know there is such a thing and Easter is the one time in the year when that happiness is inherent in all of us. Christmas, of course, is also a time of happiness, but our participation in its joys is dependent upon others. Its joys are the joys of giving and the joys of receiving. The joy of Easter is a more personal, intimate thing. Regardless of others, we can know its joys for they lie within us. They are the joys of living and the joys of knowing that life is everlasting. For that knowledge, too, is the spirit of Easter.

Inflammable in its usual sense implies explosiveness or a character that will burn readily. Flammable means exactly the same thing. The resulting confusion has caused the word inflammable to be abandoned altogether, flammable now being used to indicate ready combustibility, and non-flammable for the opposite. Perhaps the most flammable material in general domestic use is gasoline. The vapor from a pint of gasoline, mixed with the proper amount of air, has a destructive power equal to that of a pound of dynamite.

SHE HAD COME JUST IN TIME

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

ANNE SNELL slowly propelled the lawnmower up and down the small back yard of her home. The old lawnmower creaked and chewed rather than clipped the grass. Anne loved that small yard; in fact, it was the only bright spot in her life. She spent every moment her mother would let her spare from her household drudgery, keeping it closely cropped and free from stray leaves and weeds. If Mrs. Snell, Anne's mother, had had her way, the girl would have been denied even this bit of pleasure, for Mrs. Snell was a hard task mistress and did not approve of frivolities. To her life was a stern reality with always the possibility of facing one's maker lurking just around the corner. She had brought up her daughter to shun all levity and did not approve of anything but the severest style in dress. She was heard again to say that she had no use for floating ribbons and flying feathers, and that she did not purpose that her daughter should go forth decked out in silly frumpery like a full-rigged ship to lure souls from the straight and narrow way.

To Mrs. Snell life was in reality one long torture. Anne was little and plump, and would have been pretty and sweet if she had been allowed to wear anything but black-and-white checked gingham dresses made with long, tight-fitting sleeves and collars buttoned closely about her neck. Her hair, which showed a rebellious determination to wave and curl, was brushed straight back from her high unpowdered forehead; her shoes were stogies, not the new-fashioned shoes, which combine style, grace and ease, but severe, old-fashioned high, substantial footwear, which had a way of always looking old but never really worn out. To Anne there were only two things she loved—her father best of all. He was plump like herself, and would have been good-natured if his life had not been nagged out of him and he would have been generous and kind to his daughter if he had dared.

Across the fence in the next yard lived Mrs. Harriet Binner, who was a lover of flowers. She always had a yard full of bright blossoms. That day when Mrs. Binner was out in the yard at work she noticed Anne leaning against the fence that divided the Snell yard from her own. The girl was gazing with worshipful eyes at a big bed of Mrs. Binner's pansies. Mrs. Binner went up to the fence and told Anne she would be glad to give her some pansy plants if she would care to set them out.

Cared to set them out! Anne's soul thrilled. To have some of those beautiful, velvety things right in her own yard, where she could love and tend them and daily watch them unfold and lift their funny little faces to the sun. Without hesitating a moment, she ran around the fence and with face shining with happy anticipation, tried to stammer out her thanks as Mrs. Binner pressed some pansy plants into her waiting hands. Anne thanked her and ran home fairly wild with excitement. As she reached her own back door her mother appeared. She gave the girl a scathing look, and said:

"I see you run over to Harriet Binner's. Ain't you got no shame, a great big girl like you running like that for all the neighbors to see?" But considering the fact that Anne was thirty, it sounded funny to hear her mother speak as if she were a little unruly child, but Mrs. Snell was too provoked to see anything funny in her remarks. "What's that you've got in your hands?" she asked, peering over her steel-rimmed glasses in an attempt to see what Anne was carrying. "Weeds. I'll be bound. Now Harriet Binner can clutter up her own yard with trash if she wants to, but I won't have any of her sinful foolishness spilling over into my yard. Keep your own dooryard clean and unspotted in the eyes of the world and then you won't have to answer for your neighbor's wrongdoing. You throw them things on the ash pile and get yourself in here and mop the kitchen. You've wasted enough time out here now, without making yourself ridiculous."

"But mother," pleaded Anne with almost her first show of rebellion, "mayn't I set the flowers in the back of the garden? They are so beautiful they can't do anyone any harm."

"There you go again," snapped Mrs. Snell, "letting the bars down to the temptations of the world. I sometimes wonder just where you and your father would end up—no, I don't wonder, I know—if I wasn't here to keep a tight rein over you. But it shan't be said that Matilda Snell ever failed to do her duty by her family. You chuck them weeds on that trash pile and get into this house—"

So engrossed was Mrs. Snell with operating her daughter that she did not hear the door behind her open. She was aware of the fact that her husband and a tall, good-looking old woman were standing mute spectators to the little scene which was being enacted in her back yard. The first warning she had was when a pleasant but firm voice spoke close beside her and a hand was laid upon her shoulder.

"There, there, that will do, Matilda," said the woman. "Let the girl have her pansies, and anything else she wants. Surely you haven't forgotten what a hand you were for flowers and lol-lols when you were a girl."

Mother used to say she never could look out of a window in winter or take a step in the yard in summer without you yelling at her that she was stepping on some of your posies. I think if this is the way you act now you are carrying it a little too far, even if you think you are still taking revenge on Silas Courtney for running off and leaving you for Kitty Long. And he'd never have done it if it hadn't been for that come-outer revival where that old fool of an exhorter had you young folks all upset over the sins of the world being found in flying ribbons and floating feathers, or was it the other way round? Let the girl have the flowers, and you, Jasper," she said to Mr. Snell, "run along and set them out for her like a good fellow. In the meantime I'll have a little talk with my sister here. She'll feel better when I get through with her; she always did when she was a girl. And you, my dear," she called to Anne who stood looking on with bewildered eyes at the meek way her mother was taking all the other woman said, "when you get your posies set out, come in and see what a lot of pretty things I have brought you." And to her sister she said firmly, "Come in the house, Matilda. I see you and I have got to have a little settlement, and I can see there will be plenty to say. It must be all of fifteen years since we squared accounts before—too long, too long," she added soberly.

An hour later, when the precious pansy plants were all safely set in the ground and Anne and her aunt were in the big guest room upstairs, and Miss Hortense had just finished hooking over Anne's plump figure a pretty rose-colored silk, the door opened and Mrs. Snell stuck her head in the room. She gasped when she saw how her daughter was arrayed and she opened her mouth as if to speak, but Hortense merely gave her a quick look, and taking a pin from her mouth, said:

"Looks nice, don't she, Til? When she gets decent shoes, stockings and underclothes and loosens up her hair a bit, it will make a good looking rig, yes, a very good looking rig. By the way, I just saw a fine man go into the house next door. Who is he?" Mrs. Snell silently withdrew her head but Anne with her face crimson with blushes which Miss Hortense seemed to read with a good deal of satisfaction, said:

"That was John Binner, Aunt Hortense. Mrs. Binner's brother."

And Aunt Hortense silently thanked her guardian angels and the girl's also, that she had come in time.

Where Homemaker Can Save or Lose Money

The modern homemaker knows that by doing her own housework she can save money for the family. All tasks, however, do not bring her an equal return for her labor. With some of them she has no choice; they must be done in the home, and she herself must do them. Others she does because she prefers her own product, or because she is obliged to be in the house during certain hours. But if she is debating whether or not to spend time on one job rather than another, she should make a wiser choice if she knew how much money she saved by doing each and how much time it took to make this saving.

Shall she make cotton school dresses for the children, or buy them ready made? Do the washing, or send it to the laundry? Bake or buy bread? Hire help for general housework or manage alone?

Convenient information on all these points is lacking. Each woman must be her own investigator. The bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture suggests that the homemaker might start first with the tasks in which she is most interested and keep track of the time and money she spends in doing the work herself, including time and carfare spent in purchasing supplies and the cost of owning and running any equipment which she uses. She must then estimate what she would have spent had she bought a commercial substitute of a similar type and quality, or hired a domestic worker whose results are about as good as her own. From the amount of money saved and the amount of time used she can calculate what she is worth per hour in this particular task.

The speed at which she works makes a difference in the value of her time per hour. In general she can expect to find a lower money value for her time when the use of machinery has cut factory labor costs to a minimum, as in ready-made cotton house dresses, which she can buy in good enough quality for but little more than she would pay at retail for materials. Time would be better expended on work that saved a larger amount. For example, piecework commercial laundering requires much ironing by hand; the housewife receives a good return on her labor by doing this work herself. Again, ready-made silk dresses are partly hand-finished, and if a woman sews nicely it may pay her to make such dresses at home and save this labor cost. Perhaps the greatest benefit of a study of the dollars and cents value of the homemaker's time is a fuller appreciation of her contribution to the family finances.

A Possibility

In discussing the new Einstel theory a New York scientist says it is not inconceivable that we may finally be able to insulate ourselves against gravity, just as we now insulate ourselves against electricity, or against the Einstein theory.—Arkansas Gazette.

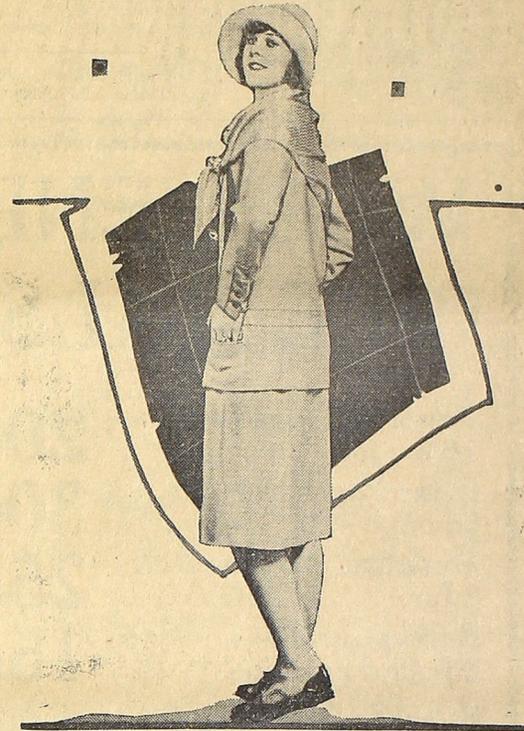

WOOLENS IN TWEED EFFECT; NEWEST SCARF NECKLINES

ONE might be inclined to think that the vogue for elaborate fashions which now prevails might react to the disadvantage of the tailored suit. On the contrary, the overwhelming number of "dressmaker" styled silk frocks and ensembles has resulted in a demand for the smartly tailored jacket-and-skirt suit fashioned of some one of the handsome woollen weaves which are so glorifying this season's fabric program. Thus the tailleur is bright blue, which interworks multi-colored bands.

Watch the new necklines! They're interesting. In creating necklines for the spring frocks and coats designers are giving free rein to imagination. In most instances the basic theme is the scarf, but it is often that camouflaged one is tempted to ask, when is a scarf a scarf?

Nevertheless you'll like 'em, these novelty scarfs which play so spectac-being welcomed as an antidote to the ornate modes which now crowd the scene.

In choosing the coveted two-piece of fine woollen for town and country wear a keenness for gray is manifest, preferably in soft light tweed. Gray woollen in tweed effect makes the jacket suit in the picture. The buttoned cuff and the belted waistline defined in this youthful suit are important features of new tailored spring modes.

A silk knotted kerchief and a soft-brimmed sports hat add a nonchalant touch to this outfit. Sunburn stockings and kid sports shoes accent that nicety of detail which is so essential to good dressing.

The beauty and the novelty of the new woollens for spring are a matter of comment throughout all fashiondom. From sturdiest cloakings to flimsiest lace weaves for dress and blouse, modern woollens interpret incomparable charm and novelty. Not in the memory of this generation have woollen weaves shown such fascinating versatility. The spirit for design which pervades the field of modern woollens especially creates new interest.

Among the latest weaves are fine

lar a role in frock and coat neckline treatments. A cape-and-scarf-in-one effect imparts a decided note of chic to the novelty cloth frock in the picture.

Everything about this street dress bespeaks last-minute styling. The material itself is notably new, being one of those loose-woven woollens which made their debut just recently. Its coloring is soft grayish green flecked with white.

The diagonal opening at once attracts attention because of its unusualness. With a deft movement the scarf can be unwound from about the throat. This done, the diagonal opening resolves itself into a V-shape effect, revealing a gay print silk vestee, flanked at one side with a single turn-back rever.

Circular one-side fullness for the hemline of this one-piece street frock is achieved by a clever bit of seam-work as the picture so clearly shows. The belt, the scarf and the diagonal opening are piped with silk in a contrasting shade.

Returning to the subject of scarf necklines. They are all-important both on formal and informal modes. A novel treatment brings the scarf ends to the back, where they tie in a soft bow with long flowing streamers. The lacy tweeds introducing striking color combinations. Some of these feature interesting borders. Among them is a sheer tweed which has a tri-color striped border.

The new ombre effects are stunning. Some of the bayadere and ombre stripes are so broken by reverse weaves and complicated construction they become very designful.

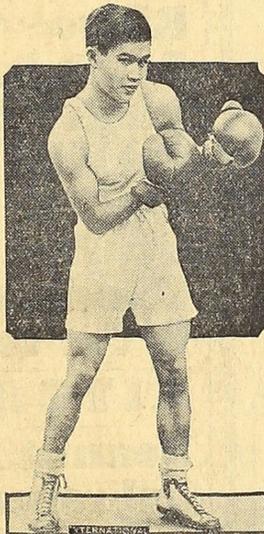

Lovely color effects are achieved by border-striped woollens, such as a shrimp tone centered with cinnamon brown, alternated with yellow or low round or pointed front neckline is softened as the scarf drapes across. Other new silhouettes are accomplished with bertha collars or caplets which tie in front with a loose careless bow. Everywhere in the mode softened bows or self fabric hold forth.

For coat, cape-scarf ends throw back over each shoulder, coming together at the back in a complete cape outline.

Booing Evil Spirits

Among semi-civilized races inter-change of dress is a serious business and is practiced regularly. In many of the numerous islands in Australasia, whenever a man is troubled with an evil spirit he leaves his home secretly, dons a woman's dress, assumes a female voice and pretends to be other than he really is.

Ship's "Husband"

Every ship on her arrival at her port has to be revictualled, her stores and gear overhauled, and generally made fit for the next voyage. Each contact of the sort will generally be in the hands of one firm, and its representative who, so to speak, "calls for orders," is known among sailors as the "ship's husband."

Whale Not "Spouter"

Contrary to popular belief, the whale does not spout water, according to an answered question in Liberty. The condensation of its warm breath in the colder air, it is explained, makes it seem like a geyser of water.

What the Gray House Hid

By Wyndham Martyn

The house itself was honest. Nothing about its spacious comfort, agreeable architecture and beautiful surroundings but suggested hominess and hospitality. And, as matters turned out, the domicile did not belie its appearance. It was entirely man's evil which besmirched its reputation, an evil for which none of the various owners of the place had been responsible. Thrills and comedy combine in this charming tale of a country mansion.

THE REAL MAN!

The real man faces the issue. He never dodges; he never steps aside and leaves his fight to someone else less able, perhaps, than he.

If he's married, he knows his wife will need protection more than ever after he's gone. A thousand dollars or so won't take care of her long; it might get away from her in a few days. But an income of, say, $100 a month as long as she lives? That's real protection!

What are you doing for YOUR wife?

COUNTY NORMAL NOTES

Monday, March 18th, was the beginning of our last quarter. United States and Michigan History, Agriculture, School Law, and Civics have replaced Psychology, Arithmetic, Geography and Hygiene in our program.

The class is almost through with practice teaching, excepting half-day stretches. Those who have already had a turn at half-day teaching report favorably.

Last Wednesday Miss Fraser of the Junior High called upon us for some assistance while she accompanied a class to the court house. Miss Ruth Blatter was glad to volunteer to fill the position for the afternoon.

We are taking great interest in a study of the ever-welcome spring birds.

Upon the request of Miss Worden, we are making reduced copies of the map of Iosco County, one of which is to be presented to each of the rural schools in the county.

Our Physical Education period is very entertaining since we have started folk dancing.

The whole class is working earnestly, diligently making posters and practicing for the Annual County Normal Play in an endeavor to again bring before the people of the county something worth while. We have chosen this year "The Thread of Destiny," a powerful drama of Civil War times. Come—and with these noble Virginians live the gaiety, the hardships, the heartaches of one of the greatest moments in the history of our nation.

SCHOOL NOTES

Ma'am, Onalea Main; Mrs. Grump, the complaining parent, Theodora Look; Mrs. Undertow, Dorothy Bigelow; Marly Undertow, Jean Metcalf; Minnie Trueblood, Delta Leslie; Undertow, "a self made man," Bruce Myles; Cipher, "a friend of education," Herbert Wendt; Trueblood, Wallace Leslie; Milt Harmon, Carl Babeock; Johnnie Grump, "the little son," James Mark, Jr.; James McWhack, the janitor, Howard Swartz; the constable, William Neumann. Specialties between acts. Admission fifty and twenty-five cents. COME!

Seventh and Eighth Grades
The following received a "B" average for the past month's work: Robert Hamilton, Clair Thompson, Ernest Wegner, Arlene Leslie, Arnold McLean, Irving Wegner and Herbert Zollweg.

The eighth grade is writing autobiographies for grammar.
Lulu Robinson has been absent because of chicken pox but is back to school again.

The eighth grade manages to keep ahead of the seventh grade in the spelling contest.

Our room is preparing a play to be given at the next Parent-Teachers meeting.

Five pupils from our room are selling tickets for the show, "Prep and Pep," given Thursday and Friday night for the benefit of the Parent-Teachers Association.

Fifth and Sixth Grades
With the exception of the fifth grade geography test, our examinations were better this month than any time this year.

Marshall Lickfelt was the only one who received "A" on hygiene test and Bobby Mark earned the only "A" in arithmetic.

The seven people having "A" on the fifth grade spelling test were Patricia Braddock, Albertina Herman, Hugo Keiser, George McDonald, Bobby Mark, Gordon Myles and Arthur Ziehl.
