It is thought the deceased passed away Wednesday evening. Friends had been with her during the early evening and she visited with them while sitting in the chair in which she was found dead. Lamps which had been burning while they were present were burned dry.

The deceased was the widow of Dr. M. J. Conant, who died sixteen years ago. Dr. and Mrs. Conant came here from New Baltimore (O) years ago and he practiced medicine in the city for about twenty-five years.

PARENTS-TEACHERS HAVE INTERESTING MEETING

The meeting of the local Parent-Teacher Association which was held Thursday evening, May 19, proved to be especially interesting and instructive. The crowd was probably the largest of the season, as about a hundred were in attendance.

The meeting was called to order by the president of the association, Mrs. Tuttle, and the business meeting immediately followed. The committee that has charge of the dinner for the eighth graders on May 17 reported that it would be held at the M. E. parsonage, and that all of the high school teachers were invited to attend. The president also appointed a nominating committee, as the June meeting will be the last one of the year.

The programme which followed the business meeting was started off with some community singing led in an efficient manner by James Mark, Sr. The Ward School followed with a drama, "The Flower's Sacrifice." The work of the children is always enjoyed by a group of this nature. G. L. Jenner, Superintendent of the Bay City schools, was next introduced. Mr. Jenner brought with him some young ladies from his high school who entertained by means of instrumental and vocal music, and readings. He then gave a practical talk concerning the vocational and college work which is being done in the schools of his city. Mr. Jenner is a man of wide and varied experience as a school man, and so we were fortunate to secure him for the evening.

The meeting was then turned over to the social committee, and the result of its work proved to be one of the important events of the evening. The lunch and social visit certainly enjoyed by all. As mentioned, the next meeting will be the last one of the season. All should plan to be present, and thus fittingly conclude a very successful year.

"NO CAUSE FOR ACTION"

IN D. & M. DAMAGE SUIT
A verdict of no cause for action was directed late Tuesday by Judge Ray Hart in the $50,000 damage suit brought against the Detroit & Mackinaw railway as the result of the death of two young men near Oscoda in 1926. The court ruled that the accident was the result of negligence on the part of the victims, Carl S. Asman and George A. Mitchell.

The young men met their deaths November 27, 1926, testimony showed, when they drove their automobile into the side of a D. & M. locomotive at a crossing near Oscoda. Damages of $25,000 were asked in each suit, both of which were brought by Charles Gershenson of Pontiac, who was acting as special administrator for the survivors, one of whom is Carl Asman's widow.

RECKLESS DRIVERS WILL LOSE DRIVERS' LICENSES

"Reckless drivers will lose their licenses in this court," said Justice W. C. Davidson today. "Fines have proven ineffective in dealing with such drivers, little attention being paid even to a heavy one. A loss of license should prove effective. It will be difficult for the person having a license revoked to secure another if he is not on his good behavior during the period, as the application for drivers license must have the sheriff's signature and he can use his discretion.

The following drivers' licenses were revoked during the week: Martin Beck of Alabaster, reckless driving, fined $10.00 and license taken away for three months. Kenneth Howitson of East Tawas, reckless driving, license revoked for six months.

NAME OF J. STERLING MORTON RECALLED ON ARBOR DAY

Many states are celebrating Arbor Day this month and these celebrations recall the name of J. Sterling Morton, who has gone down in history as the "Father of Arbor Day." Since he took the first step in his "Treeless State" towards the observance of a day set aside for tree planting, his idea has spread all over the world.

America owes much to this citizen of Nebraska, and in an illustrated feature article by Elmo Scott Watson in this issue of The Herald you can learn something of the value of his contribution. Be sure to read "The Origin of Arbor Day," in this issue.

H. S. NEW WILL SPEAK AT EAST TAWAS MEET

The directors of the Tri-County Sportsmen's Club met at Oscoda on May 12 and made further plans for the annual meeting and banquet to be held in East Tawas on the evening of May 31. The time of the banquet was set at six o'clock standard time. From all appearances this meeting will be a most entertaining one because of the unique forms of entertainment and the prominent guests that will be present. Charles Haensel, Secretary and manager of the Saginaw Board of Commerce, will act as toastmaster for the evening. A letter has just been received from former Postmaster General Harry S. New that without doubt he will be present and will be one of the speakers on the program. Wm. B. Mershon of Saginaw has also stated that without doubt he will be present. Mr. Mershon is one of the outstanding conservationists of Michigan and always has something very valuable and important to tell in sportsmen gatherings. Attempts are being made to obtain a main speaker for the evening from the Izaak Walton organization.

Tickets have been placed on sale and have been distributed over the three counties, representing the organization.

The chairmen of the various committees are as follows: Entertainment, C. A. Pinkerton; Decorating, Fred J. Adams; Reception, Dave Bergeron; Banquet, George Bigelow.

All committeemen have been working for some time in the past in order to have thorough arrangements made well in advance of the meeting and every phase of the program is being thoroughly worked out so that the evening's entertainment will go along smoothly and without interruptions. Whitney's eight-piece orchestra will furnish the music for the evening's entertainment.

Unable to stop in time to avoid hitting the car ahead of him, he swung to the right and went into the ditch. Considerable damage was done to the bus. Deputy Sheriff Henry Osterhout and William Davis responded to the scene and the injured persons were taken to the hospital.

The bride wore a gown of rose pink georgette with hat to match. She was attended by Mrs. Hattie Cooper, sister of the groom, who was attired in a dress of pink silk. The groom was attended by James Cooper.

After the ceremony, the bridal party left for the home of the bride's parents, where a delicious dinner was awaiting them. Those present were the following relatives: the bride and groom; Mr. and Mrs. James Cooper, Miss Emmelle Greene, Mr. and Mrs. Will Greene, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Bradford and daughter, Helen.

ACCESSORIES SHOULD MATCH; ADD BOWS, SUBTRACT SLEEVES

FROM simplest dressmaker and milliner to most exalted couturiere and modiste, from bootmaker to handbag specialist, jeweler, glove-maker and scarf designer, the whole world of fashionists have gone matchmaking. This idea of matching this, that and the other of costume accessories has added a very zestful and exciting note to the apparel program. Not only are the stylists who set the mode challenged to play up their most intriguing

May flowers' fancy lightly turns to thoughts of that which is soon to follow—vacation days. And thoughts of vacation are always largely attended with meditations on "what to wear." Which leads up to the wherefore of the picturing herewith of this very dainty flowery little frock. It is a typical summer-day dress. Just the thing to wear where skys are bluest, and sunshine, green fields and flower-strewn paths say "Come!" It ing creative talents, but the clientele which they serve are inspired to make of shopping an art. For with fashion's demand for a "perfect match" no longer can a woman who would dress successfully buy casually or impulsively this and that which happens to strike her fancy. Rather must she cultivate to a nicety the study of color values and related design, in order to exercise that fine discrimination in her selections such as will so correlate her attire that each costume will stand out unified and individualized. The matching vogue plays no favorites. Accessories are expected to match whether the costume be the simplest sort for sportswear or for the street ensemble, or for resplendent evening attire. In the picture are shown several intriguing "sets." The felt hat banded with the identical silk print of the large kerchief scarf which is knotted chinchily about the shoulders presents an appealing idea—especially when the gay print is in vivid tone. The newest thing in scarfs is the narrow long kind, such as the one sketched with the matching pocketbook in this illustration. A combina-is interesting to note that in designing this dress the stylist brings into play certain rules of arithmetic to that sleeves are subtracted, and bows are added. In this instance a large soft-tied bow at the neck does duty in lieu of many little bows. For you must know that summer-frock trimmings are largely a matter of bows. Scarcely a dress for daytime wear appears without its quota of bows. When in doubt, tie it with a bow and this applies to neckline, waistline, wristline, shoulder line, in fact, even the slightest excess is quite sufficient to warrant the use of numerous bows or a bow. Measuring up to the importance of the presence of bows is the absence of sleeves. With fashion, sleevelessness has become a hobby. If one insists on some sort of a covering for the arms then turn to a deep capelet or bertha collar, or streaming-from-the-shoulders panels—anything which will serve as a substitute for sleeves. Most of the summer dresses are made just that way. Another inspiration to the woman who makes her own clothes is the lovely materials which are, many of them, amazingly inexpensive, consider tion such as this gives tone to any street costume. Shoes-to-match is the latest hobby of the mode—which means that fashionable shoes are this season made of anything from straw or designful cotton prints to the most exquisite silks and novelty fabrics. The pocketbook and shoes circled in the upper right corner of the picture are handsome embroidered crepe de chine. Now that April has fulfilled the traditional promise to "bring forth ing their beauty. Gay print voiles, crepes, dimities and handkerchiefs then make up a goodly part of modish washable fabrics which, being sheer lend themselves admirably to the soft "dressmaker styling" now so much in vogue. Hand embroidery on thin materials finds favor with the mode this season, which to the woman skilled in needlecraft means "opportunity knocking at the door." SOD CULTURE IS NOW INCREASING

Better Than Tillage With Cheap Fertilizer.

Sod culture is increasing in orchards because of the expensive labor and equipment necessary to maintain clean cultivation and the gradually declining price of nitrogenous fertilizers, according to the New York State College of Agriculture. When fertilizer reaches a certain price it is more economical than tillage under certain conditions.

Sod and fertilizer have important advantages. Fertilization is more likely to be done on time than is cultivation. Sod reduces the amount of labor necessary at a busy season and leaves more time for better spraying. It is easier to haul a spray rig through a sod orchard than through a cultivated one. Where color decides the choice of a system sod and nitrogen is probably the better.

On the other hand sod orchards suffer more from mice unless a consistent program of poisoning is carried out. Such a program should be started before the mice become troublesome so that they may be kept permanently in check. Since young trees are more seriously affected, a young orchard probably should be cultivated unless there are strong reasons to the contrary.

Fire is serious at any time. In orchards adjacent to railroads or where trespassers are likely to spread fire, it may be helpful to plow fire lines at strategic points. Where the orchard is unduly exposed to fire the sensible course is cultivation. Nothing will so devitalize a tree as a good scorching of the trunk and under sides of the main limbs.

All American Plumes Are in Need of Pollination

Practically all varieties of American plums appear to be self-sterile, but since none of the varieties of this particular type are of any great commercial importance, the question of pollination is of little importance as far as the commercial fruit grower is concerned.

Most varieties of Japanese plums are also self-sterile and, therefore, require cross-pollination, preferably by a variety of the same species or type. That is, two varieties of the Japanese type, such as Abundance and Burbank, will pollinate each other, but neither one can be depended upon to pollinate a variety of the European type, such as Green Gage or Lombard.

Several of the European varieties of plums appear to be partially self-fertile. Among the varieties usually placed in this class are Italian Prune, Reine Claude and Yellow Egg. Most varieties of this type are inter-fertile among themselves, but inter-sterile when crossed with varieties of the American or Japanese type.

Light Soil Is Preferred for Early Strawberries

Strawberries are by far the most popular small fruit crop and will succeed on a variety of soils. Where early fruit is desired a light soil is to be preferred. Later crops and heavy main crops can be grown on heavier clay soils, but such soils are most difficult to prepare and are often poorly drained. A light clay loam or a sandy loam will best suit the strawberry and the finest crops are produced on soils of these types. Any ground set to strawberries should contain plenty of humus, but sods are not desirable because of the danger from white grubs. A very light clay soil or a sandy soil where soy beans have grown or where a crop of beans has been turned under is most desirable and almost the ideal soil for strawberries provided, of course, that it is drained.

Horticultural Notes

Can all you can and preserve as much as you can.

"Let us spray" as this is the most important single practice in fruit growing.

Manure is very valuable in the vineyard where it can be obtained and 12 to 15 tons per acre would be useful in a vineyard that is low in vitality.

A little judicious and corrective pruning every year will bring fruit trees up in the profitable way, and they are not likely to depart therefrom.

Strawberries are grown in every state of the Union, and this goes for both everbearing strawberries and the standard varieties.

Excepting strawberries which may need phosphorus, the one element or plant food most often required by fruits is nitrogen.

The farm on which strawberries cannot be grown is an exceptional place. Some of the other small fruits are more particular as to their requirements.

The Origin of Arbor Day

PRESIDENT WILSON HELPING PLANT TREE ON WHITE HOUSE GROUNDS

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

ALTHOUGH the date for the observance of Arbor day varies in different states of the Union, most of the celebrations are held during the months of April and May. It is therefore appropriate to recall at this time the man to whom we are indebted for this holiday and his service to the nation in taking this step to conserve one of the great natural resources of this country.

The "Father of Arbor Day" was J. Sterling Morton who at a meeting of the state board of agriculture in Nebraska on January 4, 1872, introduced a resolution setting aside April 10 for tree-planting. Nebraska had always been known as "a treeless state" but in that year, as a result of Morton's suggestion, more than a million trees were planted. The custom was continued during the following years and in 1875 Kansas and Tennessee followed the example of Nebraska by setting aside one day in the year as Arbor or Tree-Planting day. In 1876 Minnesota, alarmed by the destruction of her white pine forests, began to observe Arbor day, North Dakota began in 1882 and in Missouri the idea was taken up in 1886.

Ohio first celebrated Arbor day on April 27, 1882, at Cincinnati, as a result of a visit to that city by Baron Richard Von Steuben, the royal chief forester of the then German empire. Of that occasion an Ohio historian writes:

Von Steuben, a descendant of the famous General Von Steuben who had aided General Washington so conspicuously in the Revolutionary war, had come to America in 1831 with other Von Steubens to unite in the centennial celebration of the surrender at Yorktown.

Baron Von Steuben's work in forestry in Germany had gained him a worldwide reputation, and when he visited Cincinnati it was but natural that advocates of forest conservation in the Middle West should seek him out for advice.

"Plant trees," he told them. "For every tree you cut down, plant another, or two, if possible."

A committee was appointed to create public interest in the subject of tree planting, and its work culminated in a three-days' meeting in Music hall, beginning April 25, 1882. The schools were dismissed on the last two days to enable the pupils and teachers to take part in a celebration of tree planting in the public parks. The governor of Ohio had designated April 27 as Arbor day. Extensive preparations had been made for its observance in the park.

Cincinnati was in holiday attire. The soldiery and organized companies of citizens formed an immense procession and marched to the park. Thousands of school children were already arriving there when the marchers arrived.

"At the firing of a signal gun," writes Henry Howe, the historian, "Presidents' Grove, 'Pioneers' Grove, 'Battle Grove,' 'Citizens' Memorial Grove,' and 'Authors' Grove' were planted and dedicated with loving hands and appropriate ceremonies."

"Addresses were made by ex-Gov. M. Clay of Kentucky, Durbin Ward and others. No sight more beautiful, no ceremonies more touching, had ever been witnessed in Cincinnati. An important lesson in forestry had indeed been brought home to the hearts of the people."

In 1883 the Ohio State Forestry association was organized. The same year the Ohio legislature, by joint resolution, fixed the fourth Friday in April as Arbor day.

Howe declares that the groves planted in Cincinnati were "the first memorial groves ever planted in America; the first public planting of trees in honor of the memory of authors, statesmen, soldiers, pioneers and other distinguished citizens."

He might also have added that this was the beginning of the part played by school children in the Arbor day celebration which has become such a marked feature of the celebrations since that time.

Another result of this Cincinnati celebration was that it led directly to the formation of the American Forestry association of which George E. Loring of Salem, Mass., was first president and with which, incidentally, Morton was closely associated for many years. In 1883 the American Forestry congress (as the American Forestry association was then known) met in St. Paul, Minn. B. G. Northrop of Connecticut introduced a resolution recommending the observance of Arbor day in all the schools of the country. A committee was appointed to press the matter with Mr. Northrop as chairman. In 1884 he secured the adoption of the following resolution at the annual meeting of the National Education association.

Resolved, That in view of the valuable results of Arbor day in the six states where such a day has been observed, alike upon the school and the home, this association recommends the general observance of Arbor day for schools in all our states.

Since then the observance of Arbor day has spread beyond the United States. In 1887 the first Friday in May was set aside in the province of Ontario for tree planting. Spain adopted the plan officially in 1896. Hawaii took it up in 1905, and it is now observed in all the dependencies of the United States and in Great Britain, Canada, Australia, the English West Indies, South Africa, New Zealand, Norway, Russia, Japan and China.

In 1885 the Nebraska legislature, wishing to further honor the man who had originated the idea of Arbor day, passed an act changing the date of its observance to April 22, Morton's birthday, and making it a legal holiday in that state. Morton was born at Adams, Jefferson county, N. Y., in 1832. He received his early education at the Methodist Episcopal academy at Albion, Mich., to which state his parents had moved. In 1850 he was a student at the University of Michigan. He graduated from Union college in 1854, and the following year settled in treeless Nebraska, first at Bellevue, and later at Nebraska City, where he founded and edited the Nebraska City News, the first newspaper to be established in that state.

In 1856 and 1857 he was elected to the territorial legislature, and in 1858 was appointed secretary of the territory by President James Buchanan. Upon the resignation of Gov. W. A. Richardson, a few months later, he became acting governor and local representative of the administration in the bitter struggle in the territory. In 1866 he was the Democratic candidate for governor, but was defeated. From that time until 1881, when he was again a candidate for governor, he took no active part in politics.

In 1893 he entered the cabinet of President Grover Cleveland as secretary of agriculture, remaining in office until 1897.

By 1895 the Nebraska legislature was able to proclaim to Nebraska's sister states that henceforth she was to be known as the "Tree-Planter State" because this commonwealth, which had once been so markedly destitute of this form of verdure, now had more than 700,000 acres planted in trees.

The celebration of Arbor day in 1922 had special significance since it was the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of Arbor day and at that time Charles Lathrop Pack, president of the American Tree association, announced his far-seeing plan for celebrating the centennial of Arbor day in 1972. His idea is summed up in these words: "Plant a centennial tree and register it with the American Tree association so that your name will be on the honor roll of tree-planters and good citizens fifty years from now." Since then the association has urged this idea upon Americans so that thousands of trees will be planted and marked by 1972 and the centennial celebration of that year may be made the greatest ever held in this country.

THREE HOURS' WAIT

(© by D. J. Watson.)

LYDIA MASON had sat for twenty minutes in the same attitude, gloved hands folded upon her black handbag, neat feet close together, back straight, spectacles turned toward the great clock where time seemed to have taken a notion to stand still. Through the waiting-room people passed without a glance at the plain, little, old figure. Where in the tunket were they all going, Lydia asked herself. If they had homes why didn't they stay in them on such a bitter day? She wondered wistfully if any one of the women she saw was headed for the old ladies' home, like herself.

Lydia was going to the old ladies' home because Roxy Anderson was there. Roxy wanted her to come. She wrote that it was the splendidest place ever was; about as nice as being in a first-class hotel. And Roxy knew. She had traveled round a good bit before she spent all her money. Extravagance made the home necessary for Roxy. Not so with Lydia. Lydia had her nice bit of means safely invested. But what was the use? It wasn't worth while to keep up a house just for herself; she didn't believe she'd like to live at a high-toned boarding-house and a hotel was too dressy to suit her. Better join Roxy at the old ladies' home. They'd find some fun in each other maybe, useless old hulks though they were.

Useless! That was what hurt Lydia most. At her time of life most women had stepped into the background. Still, it kind of made her wince to think for the next fifteen or twenty years she must sit idle, she who had always been so up-and-doing. Lands sakes! She was strong as a horse yet. Only — nobody seemed to need her any more.

She patted back a yawn with her gray-gloved hand. Three hours to wait before she could take her train. Of course, she could take a bus, but she did love to ride on the cars. The trip to Belleville was worth waiting for.

Let's see. She knew somebody here in this place. The Terry family. They'd moved from Westmore here when the boy, Dick, was about eight years old. The Terrys had lived next door to Lydia for quite a spell. Dick must be a big lad now, grown up. How she'd like to see him. Cute as a fox, that youngster; always running in to sample her cookies and fried cakes. She'd thought a lot of him. Wasn't that a directory over there? Guess she'd look at it.

Lydia found a number of Terrys, but only one Richard D. That was Dick. "D" for Dean, his mother's name. No. 77 Winding way. She'd hunt him up. Somebody would show her the way. And she was tired to death of sitting still.

In the street Lydia asked a policeman. He helped her aboard a street car and told the conductor to let her off at a certain corner. Easy so far. In an incredibly brief time she was trotting down a narrow street looking for 77. Of course Dick would be away at work, but she would have a nice visit with his mother.

Seventy-seven was a shabby house with dusty curtains at the window. She picked up a child's toy as she passed through the scrap of front yard. A little girl of nine opened the door. She was the living picture of Dick as she had last seen him.

"Kids!" shouted the little girl. "She's come! Grandma is here!" She grabbed Lydia by the hand and pulled her into a room, woefully disordered and none too warm, where there were four other children.

"This is Nina," explained the oldest child gravely. "This is Daffy. This is Billy. The baby is Betty; she's just getting over whooping cough. I'm Nell."

"My sakes alive!" cried Lydia. "Every one of you looks exactly like Dick Terry."

"He's our daddy!" cried Nina. "He's a good daddy, too!" added curly-pated Billy.

"Where's your mother?" demanded Lydia.

"Mother's gone by-by!" piped Betty hoarsely.

"She means," explained Nell, "mother's dead. And daddy's at work, like he always is. He works terrible hard, daddy does, because it takes such a lot to feed five little mouths. That's what grandma says. She's gone to the hospital. And daddy said he'd send us another grandma today if there was one to be found. You're her, aren't you?"

"Goodness me! I guess so," said Lydia. She was staggered at the state of things. Dick grown up, a widower with five. "Have you had any dinner?"

Nell flushed. "We had a piece—" "Daddy said he'd bring home hamburger!" shouted Billy.

"It's daddy's birthday," sighed Nell. "He's thirty-one years old today. That's awful old."

"Dear, dear!" Lydia drew a long breath. "Look here, Nell! Do you know where there's a good grocery store and meat market 'round here?"

Nell did. "Come with me then. Now, children, you be good as gold till we get back. Maybe we'll bring you something nice."

"You can trust them," Nell said. She put on her outgrown coat and shabby cap. She got the old market basket. Then she paused, embarrassed, another nervous flush staining her earnest face. "Daddy didn't — I haven't got a cent of money," she said. "And — and daddy said we mustn't ask to be trusted. Pay as you go, is our motto," she added proudly.

"A good motto, too," said Lydia warmly. "But don't you do a mite of worrying about who's going to pay for these things."

The grocer and the butcher were very polite to Lydia, because she bought the meat and knew what she wanted. Nell's eyes grew bigger and brighter with every interesting parcel that went into the old basket. When it was stuffed full as it would hold Lydia bought a lot of things to be delivered at once—a six-pound chicken, a sack of flour, potatoes, apples, cranberries, butter, cabbage, celery, sugar.

"We'll have to hop, Nell," Lydia said as they hurried home carrying the basket between them. Her chin was up, her cheeks pink, her blue eyes sparkling. She whisked her discreet gray skirt like a girl. Nell laughed and rumped beside her. For didn't they have the biggest secret? Grandma was going to cook a birthday dinner for daddy!

A generous supply of lollypops kept the kids quiet for the next two hours, while Nell and "grandma" "hopped." The dinner was ready, but still Dick didn't come. She had wanted to sit down and eat with the family, but if Dick didn't come pretty soon she'd have to run. Her hands trembled with disappointment as she pinned on her hat with the purple pansies. Betty began to wail: "Grandma! Grandma!" Nell just sank on her knees and buried her face in "grandma's" skirt. She was broken-hearted. The door opened. Dick, tired, pale, all but breathless.

"I've looked high and low. There's not a grandma to be had for love or money," he began. And saw Lydia.

He knew her. He had never forgotten the cookies. He kissed her cheek. Lydia swelled up and sniffed and had to use her pocket-handkerchief. This tired man was not her Dick except for his crooked, tender smile.

Suddenly she took off her hat. Drat that train! Let it go without her. Roxy would look after her trunk when it got there. She just had to stay and see Dick and the kids eat their dinner. That stuffed chicken was sending up a heavenly aroma and the potatoes were ready to mash.

"Guess I'll stay and grandma you folks till you get so you can turn around, Dick," she said cheerfully. She patted his shoulder. "Now run and wash up. Dinner's ready to put on the table. It's your birthday, Dicky, and you must look just as nice as ever you can."

Adopted French Words

Given American Tang

Those who anglicize the pronunciation of garage are not guilty of an impropriety, although they depart conspicuously from the common habit, says the New York Herald Tribune. You will go weeks without hearing any one say "gar-aj" or "gar-ij" as though garage rhymed with marriage and carriage. Yet the dictionaries agree in admitting that pronunciation as an alternative to "ga-razh." With this warrant from the orthoepists, "gar-ij" stands as good English.

But "ga-razh" has all the better of it in popular speech. "Ma-sazh" for massage is a parallel instance. Americans have a decided liking for as nearly a French pronunciation of adopted French words as their tongues can manage. "Valet" has been trying to get anglicized for a hundred years in the United States, with only partial success. A word like "hangar" as the French speak it defies our vocal apparatus, so we frankly admit defeat and give it an American hang; but the Franco-American entente prevails in our pronunciation if it is any wise attainable. No "shofer" drives his car to the "gar-ji."

The anglicizers of garage are courageous nonconformists. They have a perfect right to their choice in the court of lexicography, at the expense perhaps of being thought ignorant by the ignorant and, by others, eccentric.

"Words to That Effect"

Of Rasputin, evil genius of the Romanoffs, the story is told that when, on one occasion, he applied to the late Grand Duke Nicholas for permission to visit the imperial general headquarters, the grand duke's reply was: "Come, and I will have you hanged."

According to L'Europe Nouvelle, Paris, Rodzianko, an-time president of the duma, in the act of compiling his memoirs, called upon the grand duke and asked him if he had really sent Rasputin that message.

"What was I reported to have said?" inquired the grand duke.

"Come, and I will have you hanged."

The grand duke laughed. "Well," said he, "those were not my exact words." He refused to discuss the matter further, leaving Rodzianko to infer that they were "words to that effect."

DAIRY

PUT POLISH ON COWS FOR SHOW

Animals Should Be Blanketed and Tied in Cool Barn.

Cattle which are to wear blue ribbons at the county or state fair this fall, should have the fine polish put on their appearance, according to the specialists in dairying and animal husbandry at the Ohio State university.

After the animals to be shown have been selected, the specialists say, they should be tied in a cool, dark barn, and should be blanketed, and that within the next few days, not just a week or so before the fair at which they are to be shown.

Before their blankets are put on, the prize-winners-to-be should have a bath, in water which is not too cold. If they have not shed their long, rough hair, it should be clipped at once, so that their coats will be smooth by fair time.

Their tails, necks and heads should be clipped again about a week before the fair, and their horns polished at the same time. They should be groomed and rubbed down daily.

Animals should be in good flesh to show well. If rapid gains in flesh must be made, a little molasses along with their grain mixture may help. Soaked beet pulp will also help in putting them into condition. Bulky feeds, rather than highly concentrated ones, are better in fitting show animals for the ring.

Every day the animals should be led into the open for a little exercise and to be trained in posing for the judges. "The benefits derived from showing at fairs are not measured by the premium money received, but by the education, acquaintance, and advertising that one gets," say the specialists.

Milk Fever Treatment

Given by Nebraska Man

Inflating a cow's udder with sterile air from a regular milk fever outfit when signs of milk fever first appear, and tying the teats with broad tapes just tight enough to retain the air is the most effective treatment known for milk fever, says Dr. L. V. Skidmore, Nebraska College of Agriculture, Lincoln.

Never drench the cow with any liquid or allow the tapes to remain on the teats more than 20 minutes, is a precaution to those administering treatment. The drench may go into the cow's lungs and the tapes may cause the teats to slough off. The theory that some dairymen have tried adding a little molasses to the cow's ration four to six weeks before calving has been found to be effective in some cases in preventing milk fever.

The characteristic position of the cow affected with milk fever is lying down with her feet extended forward under her body and her head turned backward toward her flank. There is generally a crook in the animal's neck resembling the letter S. Later the cow will become unconscious and stretch out full length on her side if she is not properly treated.

Calf Scours Is Usually

Caused by Indigestion

Calf scours is a common disease of the digestive tract and is usually caused by indigestion. The calf that scours easily in life may be seriously handicapped and of course sometimes dies. Prevention is best but not always possible. Care should be taken that the calf is not overfed, that the milk is always fed warm, and that the milk is uniformly sweet and fed from clean buckets. If scours occur cut the milk down one-half and give a dose of one to three ounces of castor oil or of mineral oil. Raw eggs may be used to correct the trouble. Two or three tablespoonfuls of lime water in the milk is sometimes effective.

Off-Flavored Milk Due to Bacteria in Pails

Bitter and off-flavored milk is generally caused by bacteria that enters the milk after it is drawn from the cow. A careful sterilization of every utensil that comes in touch with the milk will probably eliminate the trouble.

It is suggested by the University of Kentucky, in case of bad flavored milk, that a sample of normal flavored milk that has soured, be added to the bucket at the time of the milking. This will enable the normal bacteria to gain the supremacy in the milk and will again bring it back to its normal flavor.

Stimulate Milk Flow

When cows are stabled much of the time the udders and rear quarters usually become more or less soiled. This can be prevented in a measure by clipping the long hair around those parts but even then frequent washing is necessary. If the best quality of milk is to be produced the udder should be washed before each milking. One man should go through the barn with a soft cloth and a pail of warm water doing this just before milking started.

Are You Ready

When your Children Cry for It

Baby has little upsets at times. All your care cannot prevent them. But you can be prepared. Then you can do what any experienced nurse would do—give a few drops of plain Castoria. No sooner does than Baby is soothed; relief is just a matter of moments. Yet you have eased your child without use of a single doubtful drug; Castoria is vegetable. So it's safe to use as often as an infant has any little pain you cannot pat away. And it's always ready for the crueler pangs of colic, or constipation or diarrhea; effective, too, for older children. Twenty-five million bottles were bought last year.

Feel Dizzy?

Headachy, bilious, constipated? Take NR TO-NIGHT—tonight. This mild, safe, vegetable remedy will have you feeling fine by morning. You'll enjoy free, thorough bowel action without a sign of griping or discomfort.

SAME PRESCRIPTION

HE WROTE IN 1892

When Dr. Caldwell started to practice medicine, back in 1875, the needs for a laxative were not as great as today. People lived normal lives, ate plain, wholesome food, and got plenty of fresh air. But even that early there were drastic physical and purges for the relief of constipation which Dr. Caldwell did not believe were good for human beings.

The prescription for constipation that he used early in his practice, and which he put in drug stores in 1892 under the name of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a liquid vegetable remedy, intended for women, children and elderly people, and they need just such a mild, safe bowel stimulant.

This prescription has proven its worth and is now the largest selling liquid laxative. It has won the confidence of people who needed it to get relief from headaches, biliousness, flatulences, indigestion, loss of appetite and sleep, bad breath, dyspepsia, colds, fevers. At your druggist, or write "Syrup Pepsin," Dept. BB, Monticello, Illinois, for free trial bottle.

Fire Hazard of Matches

Anyone who has an opportunity of a birdseye view of a big crowd at night will notice that there is not a second but what it is not possible to locate a burning match at some point in the gathering. It has been figured out that each minute, 500,000 matches are consumed in the United States, and every one of them is a fire hazard! It has been determined that the average match burns about 30 seconds, and that it takes anywhere from 6 to 14 seconds to light a cigarette, a cigar or a pipe. It is in this burning remnant that the menace lies; and that it is a menace is proved by the many fires attributed each year to matches tossed aside carelessly—Exchange.

It costs very little to recondition a MODEL T FORD

THE Ford Motor Company is making a new car, but it is still proud of the Model T. It wants every owner of one of these cars to run it as long as possible at a minimum of trouble and expense.

Because of this policy and because of the investment that millions of motorists have in Model T cars, the Ford Motor Company will continue to supply parts as long as they are needed by Ford owners.

So that you may get the greatest use from your Model T, we suggest that you take it to the nearest Ford dealer and have him estimate on the cost of any replacement parts that may be necessary.

You will find this the economical thing to do because a small expenditure now will help to prevent costlier repairs later on, increase the value of the car, and give you thousands of miles of additional service.

For a labor charge of only $2.60 you can have your generator put in first-class condition. A new universal joint will be installed for a labor cost of $3. Overhauling the carburetor costs $1.50; steering gear, $3.50; radiator, $7.50. A complete overhauling of the rear axle assembly runs between $5.75 and $7 for labor. An average price of $22.50 covers the overhauling of the motor and transmission.

These prices are for labor only because the need and number of new parts depend on the condition of each car. The cost of these parts is low, however, because of the Ford policy of manufacturing and selling at a small margin of profit.

Radio Communication Spreads

Washington.—Radio communication, once a plaything of scientists in their laboratories, is becoming the universal medium of entertainment and transmission of thought, according to a world survey recently concluded by the Commerce department.

Broadcasting stations, the report shows, are operating near the Arctic circle, on the equator, and far down in the Southern hemisphere. From Greenland to Ceylon and from Yugoslavia to China radio sets are being tuned in to catch practically the same type of programs given in the United States.

In the short decade since the conquest of the ether for popular use began, more than 20,000,000 radio sets have been placed in homes all over the world, the commerce report states. Though the United States uses nearly half these sets, Great Britain and Germany have 2,500,000 each; France has 11,250,000; Japan, 550,000, and Argentina, 500,000. Sweden, Austria, Czechoslovakia and Italy each have more than 250,000.

While American radio fans are entertained by programs provided by advertisers, in most European countries the government owns the broadcasting stations and pays entertainers by taxing the man at the loud speaker.

These taxes, the report says, range from 5 cents per radio set in France to $18 in Salvador. The British tax is $2.45; the German, $5.70; and Australian, $5.85, and the Japanese, $9. European stations generally outrank those of this country in power, it was said. Russia and Finland each maintain stations with 40,000 watts power; Sweden has two stations of 30,000 and 20,000 watts each; France has one of 20,000; while the largest British station is rated at 16,000 watts. There are more than 200 broadcasting stations in Europe. South America has 62; Australia, 25, and Japan, 7.

American industry, the department said, manufactures a large share of the world's radio equipment. Approximately 90 per cent of the world's output is made in America, Germany and Great Britain.

United States exports of radio apparatus have been increasing steadily in the last decade. In 1928, they reached a value of $12,000,000, a record figure.

During the last seven years, it was said, more than $50,000,000 worth of radio equipment and supplies have been sold by America to foreign markets.

Canada is our most important customer for radio material, taking 44 per cent of this country total shipment in 1928. Argentina ranked second, taking 13 per cent, and Australia, third, buying 3 per cent.

The photograph shows Eddie with Secretary of State Stimson in the latter's office.

Public Officials and Publicity

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

Even in my earliest youth when ambition burned most hotly within me I had no desire to become a public official of any sort. I was going to be quite contented to run a locomotive on the narrow gauge railroad which crossed the prairies a short distance from our place, or if fortune favored me in any extravagan gant way possibly to be a conductor. Charlie Hixon, our next-door neighbor's boy of my own age, once in a burst of confidence, told me that he expected to go to congress, but such distinction had no allurements for me. There was too much criticism of such an official, too much publicity, too much of getting one's name into the newspapers. A congressman could not turn around or neglect to do so without some mention being made of the fact, in a Washington press dispatch. A lot of fellows I knew wanted to be President of the United States, but not I.

Now just supposing you were king of England or President of the United States. At first thought it would seem like a lot of fun. There would be a big salary, and a fine house in which to live—several houses if you were king—and people to wait on you and to send you things and all that. It looks soft. The President gets countless things at Thanksgiving and Christmas—carloads of turkeys and fresh eggs and collie dogs, and goodness knows what sorts of things are sent to a king.

But a great public official has no privacy. He can't legitimately call his soul his own. Every move he makes is commented on. Whatever he eats or wears or dares to think about—much less to express an opinion upon—gets into the newspapers. It must be wretchedly tiresome.

Now about going to church. If you were king or President it would always be in the Saturday's paper where you intended to worship the next day, if you had any intention of worshiping, and why you didn't intend to do so, if you didn't. I have wondered often if Mr. Coolidge during the summer really wanted to go to church every Sunday and listen to blind men or Scandinavians preach, or if he wouldn't rather sometimes stay at home and lie around reading the Sunday papers, or playing with one of the dogs. But if he didn't go he would have to make up reasons to satisfy the inquisitive newspaper men and maybe it's easier to go and sit quietly through the service and then to smile and wave your hand at everyone when the service is ended than it would be to explain why you stayed at home.

Nancy and I didn't go to church last Sunday. We stayed at home and had a beautifully quiet time and read Jane Austen's "Northanger Abbey." And no one asked us why, and we didn't get our names in the paper, but you see we are not public officials.

Monster Puzzles Scientists

Paris.—A strange monster with an "almost human" head, which was killed in the Venezuelan jungles ten years ago, was described by Dr. Georges Montandon, noted French scientist, in a paper read before the members of the French Anthropological institute. Photographs of the monster were projected on a screen. The animal was described as having 32 teeth, no tail and being about the size of a large man.

The photograph, according to the scientists, revealed an unknown anthropoid, akin to the orang-outang species but closely resembling the Neanderthal man.

Doctor Montandon placed particular emphasis in his lecture on the size of the animal, saying it was much larger than the Atele apes which it resembles in some ways and larger than any anthropoid species ever found in Latin-America. This fact alone, he said, made the discovery of outstanding importance.

The scientist's paper told how the monster was killed by Francois De Loys, a French geologist and friend of Doctor Montandon, who penetrated unexplored depths of the Venezuelan jungle on a scientific expedition. One day, while seated in a temporary camp with a companion, the geologist heard a crashing in the branches of nearby trees.

DIPPING INTO SCIENCE

Why Flowers Are Not Green

Flowers are not green because if they were they would not be noticed by insects. The propagation of flowering plants depends upon pollination with others like it. Insects traveling from one flower to another do most to bring about this fertilization which makes for reproduction. The colors of petals help the insect find the flowers.

(© 1929, Western Newspaper Union.)

A moment later two ape-like creatures jumped down into the camp clearing, waving their hairy arms. The two men fired and one animal fell.

The geologist immediately propped up the dead animal and photographed it at close range. He attempted to preserve the body or head but, owing to grave danger which overtook the party, was forced to abandon everything but his records in a notebook and the photograph.

A copy of the notes and the photograph were sent to Doctor Montandon, who said he had made extensive studies of the subject and hoped that an expedition could be formed to search the area where the animal was killed. He said hope of forming such an expedition was the cause of his silence on the subject in the past, but now he would be pleased if others undertook the journey.

Nevada Desert Once Rich Land

Lovelock, Nev.—The barren stretches of Nevada once furnished rich pasture land for thousands of animals; its valleys were covered with deep waters of the ancient Lake Lahontan and its mountains were covered with verdure, is the theory advanced by John T. Reid, Lovelock naturalist, in explanation of the finding of the metacarpal bone of an elephant by road builders in a gravel pit at the depth of 20 feet.

"The head of a buffalo, which had been found in a gravel pit four miles southwest of Lovelock, was donated to the University of Nevada recently," Reid said. "This discovery was considered of special importance in the study of old Lake Lahontan, which not so long ago covered the entire area in which the city of Lovelock is now located. At that time, probably not longer than 1,000 years ago, when the lake was at its greatest height, Lovelock was under 320 feet of water.

"The head of a species of extinct horse," continued Reid, "was found in the gravel banks northward of Pyramid lake. More recently, only two years ago, the bones of an extinct species of horse was found near Woolsey. It is probable the bones of the two horses came from the same species. However, there have been found in various parts of the Western mountain area, bones of three different types of horses. All these signify that these animals were numerous and ranged over considerable of the West-

What the Gray House Hid

The Mystery of a Haunted Mansion

W. N. U. Service
Copyright by Wyndham Martyn

By Wyndham Martyn

THE STORY

Hilton Hanby, prosperous New York merchant, has purchased a country place—the Gray house, near Pine Plains. Miss Selenos, a former tenant of the Gray house, calls at his office and warns him that the house is under a curse. Further alarming details are impressed upon Adolf Smucker, Hanby's secretary, by a man who claims to have been chauffeur for Sir Stanford Seymour, former occupant of the place. Hanby laughs off the warning. They have received both from Miss Selenos and from Smucker's acquaintance as some form of practical joke. But they are shocked when they hear that the caretaker whom they have put in charge of the Gray house, a man named Kerr, has been mysteriously murdered.

"Oh, Hil, how lovely!" she cried. "I've hated your business because it has kept you away from us so much. Can you really afford it?"

"I'm rolling in money," he said gaily. "I bought acreage and sold by the front foot. I'm a boy again!"

"That's nothing new, Housatonic," she laughed. "Ada Bishop really believes that's your absurd name. You'll be a boy when you die!"

"Darling Dina, don't worry about Smucker and his drunken dream. I'll have it out with old Bill tomorrow and Reggie will have to confess that he failed. It was a fool scheme of theirs, anyway."

"When did you ever know Bill Pelham to do anything really foolish?"

"He acted the part superbly. It fooled me completely."

"I don't mean that exactly. It seems so stupid to imagine that any one could be scared away from a house by vague talk like that. Hil, do verify the names Smucker gave you—Mr. Seymour and the others. Promise me!"

"Probably all names that Reggie thought up on the spur of the moment; but I'll ask the agent I bought the place from, if that will satisfy you."

Adolf Smucker was always earlier at the office than the other employees. It gained him a reputation for punctuality, and enabled him to earn much of the firm's business that would otherwise be kept from him.

He was nervous on this particular morning. He had gone home the night before, and had told his family of all the daring and splendid things he had said and done. Mrs. Smucker, usually so admiring and reassuring, had remarked:

"Dolf, you've fired yourself. You might have waited till the two girls was out of school!"

Smucker's father had listened rapturously to the account of the planked steak.

"Real beer!" he said many times. "Not in this life shall I taste real beer again!"

"Nor in the life to come," said his daughter-in-law. "Turn your thought from your sinful appetites." She looked at the clock. "It's time you went to the docks."

Assuredly Adolf Smucker was unhappy. He was filing letters industriously when Hanby sent for him.

"No," said Hanby, as Adolf unsheathed his newly pointed pencils. "I'm not giving you any letters to-day. I'm getting rid of you. The cashier will pay you a month's salary."

The Adam's apple tried to burst its bounds.

"I'm sure I've worked long and faithfully for you, Mr. Hanby," Smucker cried. "I don't deserve this!"

"You don't," returned Hanby. "Two weeks' salary would be quite sufficient. Listen to me, Smucker. You've never been either faithful or efficient. God knows why I didn't fire you years ago. I suppose those hard-luck stories you used to spring whenever you were in danger saved you. You told me less than a month ago the same old yarn about paying installments on your house and looking after an old father. Don't interrupt! Your house was paid for three years ago, and your old father is night watchman on some docks near where you live. Your three elder children keep themselves and help support the home. Probably you are comfortably fixed."

Smucker raised his voice.

"Mr. Hanby, I won't be fired without a good reason!"

"You've not even been honest," continued Hanby. "There are petty cash irregularities that can be gone into if you wish it, and certain losses of postage stamps. If you are wise, you won't irritate me any longer."

Smucker withdrew. So they had found out about him! What a trick for a rich man like Hanby, to be watching when an old employee used an office stamp for his private correspondence!

als controlled the workers and enslaved the capitalists! He had been one of those who believed that Lenin was to be the savior of America. Lenin had died, but others would be raised up. Smucker's visions of vengeance were stupendous. They died down a little when he reflected that he must face that sound domestic economist, Mrs. Adolf. He drew his month's unearned salary vindictively.

At eleven o'clock Bill Pelham, summoned by telephone, sauntered into Hanby's office. He was a slight man, above middle height, with dark hair and eyes. His was a tired, lined face—the face of a man to whom success has not come. No man was closer to him than Hanby.

"How's the dog market, Bill?" Hanby asked.

"I don't know; but my business is going to the dogs, if that's what you mean. We can't all guess where the wheel is going to stop. Sorry I couldn't get to your dinner party last night. Dina rang me up and told me that my absence was the only blemish."

"That's a fact, Bill," Hanby looked at him keenly. "You don't relish this country life idea?"

"It's a tragedy to me," Pelham groaned. "Your home is my home. You let me come when I want to and leave when I want to. You ask no vain questions, and my grouches never make you angry. I don't know what the devil I shall do. You've been blessed above all the men I know. Your girls are pretty and popular, and yet they don't go guzzling gin with chauffeurs. Your boy is popular, and yet he keeps clean. I've often thought the Hanby family was sent to show that decency was possible even in this jazz life we lead. Do I relish your going? Don't make a jest of it!"

"You'll be at the Gray house, too. You can't drop out of our lives, so don't anticipate it. Funny place, the Gray house! I suppose you read that my caretaker was murdered last night?"

"Haven't seen the morning papers. Tell me about it."

"A puzzling crime," commented Pelham, when he had heard all that his friend knew.

"I may be next," Hanby said, wondering how long Bill could maintain this air of complete innocence. "Poor Dina a widow, with the chance of marrying a better man!"

"Don't!" said Bill, frowning. "I don't like to hear you make a joke of that sort of thing. If Dina died, could you ever marry again?"

"Good G—d, no! Of course not!" replied Hanby, startled.

"She couldn't either. 'Dil, old man, don't you know that every now and again in this human family two people are born like Dina and you—two people whom nothing can separate but death? I've watched you with other women, and I've watched her with other men—pretty women, too—and better-looking cusses than you. Tell me, have you ever seen a woman you care a d—n for since you met Dina?"

"No."

"And she's seen no other man. You two are marvels. That family of yours is what it is because of its parents."

"I didn't mean that about Dina marrying," Hanby said, a little shamefacedly. "You know men don't like to seem sentimental. Your friendship has been a great deal to you. Bill, and you are not going to drop out."

"I worship Dina," Bill Pelham said meditatively. "Directly I saw her, twenty years ago, I knew that she was the one woman." He smiled whimsically. "Every Christmas she lets me kiss her under the mistletoe. Once every year! You can bet I shall be with you on Christmas eve, anyway."

Hanby smiled.

"If we lived in some European country, I should have to challenge you to a duel for that and kill you."

"It's the dark, saturnine villain who does the slaying," Bill reminded ed him. "I should sneer diabolically, and ask you to name the under which you would like my rapier to go." He lighted a cigarette. "Why did you ask me to come?"

"To discuss your Aunt Selina."

"How the devil did you know I had an Aunt Selina? She was a great-granddaughter, a playmate of Martha Washington, if the family history is correct."

"I didn't know it. Look here, Bill—Dina's all upset about some merry spirits who have been trying to frighten me away from Pine Plains. Do you admit coming here and pretending to be Miss Selenos, who hated and despised me above all men, and pinned her faith on dogs?"

"One of us is crazy," replied Bill Pelham. "At the time you say I was here, a dozen men will prove that I was in Chicago. I have played practical jokes, and I hope to again, if I live; but I know nothing of this. Tell me all."

Hanby described not only his experience but that of Adolf Smucker.

"You can count Reggie out, too," Pelham declared. "He's at the bankers' convention in Baltimore. These two people may be fakes, but Reggie and I are innocent. Silly sort of stories to tell!"

"That's what Dina said."

"Is she worried?"

"Just a little. Nothing physical can scare her, but she takes funny psychological excursions. She was reading an English book on 'Haunted Houses' when I left."

"There are such things," Pelham said, gravely. "Glamis castle, for one, and the house where the Wesleys lived. I don't know enough to disbelieve. Look here, Hil—we've got to get to the bottom of this."

"What do you suggest?"

"I've got a clear day. I'll interview the man you bought the place from, and find out about past tenants. Also, I'll see if there was a Selenos family holding land grants in California. I'll probably drop in after dinner. Where are you off to?"

concluded Pelham, as Hanby reached for his hat.

"Pine Plains, Junior is motoring me up. I'll be back by dinner time, with luck. Anyhow, wait for me. I've got to see about another caretaker and arrange for the burial of Kerr. Not a cent was found on him, and it seems that he has no relations. I feel responsible, in a way. Junior seems to think that he's going to be a Sherlock Holmes, to the chagrin and confusion of the Pine Plains police."

"There is no such thing as a meaningless crime," Pelham remarked. "Junior may be of some help."

"I hope so. I want to clear up everything, so that Dina and Celia won't have a chance to feel nervous. Dina has a vague idea that the country is dangerous. She was raised in Cleveland's most select residential district, and has always lived in cities. I'm a wild man from the Housatonic feud country, and the idea of tramps doesn't give me a thrill at all."

"If I know Dina," Bill said thoughtfully, "she'll be less worried about tramps than she will about any reputed curse on the place. Like many of those highly strung women, she's psychically sensitive. If all these tragedies happened there, she's bound to hear of them. You've already had a murder on your front lawn."

"That's not serious," Hanby returned. "Some wandering yegg killed the poor fellow for his savings."

"I wish you hadn't sent that Selenos woman off without getting more particulars from her. You calmly shut all avenues of information."

"Her manner was so infernally insulting, Bill. You know I'm not the sort of man to be told that I must sell the house I've selected as a home after inspecting hundreds of places. The poor old thing was crazy."

"What about Smucker?"

"Hooch talked there. Smucker's not too well balanced, either."

Bill Pelham shook his head.

"I don't like it," he said. (TO BE CONTINUED.)

Who Has Missing Half of Cullinan Diamond?

When the Cullinan diamond, the largest in the world, estimated to be worth up to $25,000,000, and which is among the British crown jewels, was dug from the earth at the Premier mines at Cullinan, South Africa, in 1905, it was found that it was considered to be only part of a much bigger diamond. The enormous half brother, however, has never been found, although scientists, diamond miners, financiers, geologists and thieves have been searching for it for twenty-three years. Its whereabouts and even its existence are one of the world's mysteries.

South Africa abounds with strange stories of the missing half of the Cullinan diamond. One version is that it was found by a native worker in the diamond mines who feared to disclose the find because of the strict law governing the illicit selling of stones. A notorious criminal once almost had his hands on it, the story goes, but he attempted to trick the native who was prepared to sell it to him and the native fled with the diamond.

CIGARETTE TAX MONEY WILL GO TO SCHOOLS OF STATE

Money raised by the cigarette tax bill signed by Governor Green will be distributed to poorer school districts of the state.

The levy is one cent on each ten cigarettes. Stamps will be sold by the department of state and must be affixed by the distributor or dealer. Estimates of the revenue range from $1,500,000 to more than $3,000,000. Cigarette manufacturers claim, however, it will yield not more than $1,200,000 a year.

The purpose of approval by the governor was to provide funds without taxing property for the apportionment of $2,000,000 a year to the poorer school districts as provided in the Turner bill.
