MARK-HENNIG

The home of Mr. and Mrs. John A. Mark was the scene of a very pretty wedding Sunday, June 2nd, when their youngest daughter, Dorothy, was united in marriage to Marvin W. Hennig, son of Mrs. Frank Martin, of Detroit.

The ring service was read by Rev. John LeVan at 1:30 o'clock. The bridal party took their places under an arch of apple blossoms mingled with yellow and white streamers to the strains of the Lohengrin wedding march played by Miss Dora Mark, a niece of the bride. "O Promise Me" was sung by Mrs. Jas. F. Mark.

The bride was beautiful in a bouffant gown with a white satin fitted bodice and skirt of tiered lace. Her veil was of tulle attached to a tiara of pearls and orange blossoms and she carried a shower bouquet of white roses, lilies of the valley and babies' breath.

The matron of honor, Mrs. Elizabeth Holland, sister of the bride, was dressed in blue georgette and carried yellow roses. Byron Mark attended the groom.

After the ceremony, a bounteous dinner was served to the immediate families and a few friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Hennig, after touring the northern part of the state, will be at home to their friends at 17802 Mt. Elliot Avenue, Detroit.

The out of town guests were Mr. and Mrs. Frank Martin, and Mr. and Mrs. Carlton Boyd of Detroit, and Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Anderson of Flint.

GOV. GREEN SPEAKS AT TRI-COUNTY MEET

Governor Fred W. Green, Judge W. W. Potter and Dean S. T. Dana were among the speakers at the seventh annual Tri-County Sportsmen's banquet held at East Tawas Friday evening. Over 250 sportsmen were present.

The officers elected for the ensuing year are as follows: President Joseph Miller, Jr., Harrisville; 1st Vice President, H. N. Butler, East Tawas; 2nd Vice President, James McGillivray, Oscoda; 3rd Vice President, Wm. Doan, Mio; Secretary-Treasurer, R. G. Schreck, East Tawas.

Governor Green said that he was convinced that Michigan should have conservation and that a collapse of the present program would be a disappointment to him.

"My term as governor of Michigan will not be a success," the governor said, "unless the department of conservation accomplishes its noteworthy program, which I feel confident it will. I shall be keenly disappointed if the plans miscarry for I am a most ardent supporter of this enterprising work and no man can truthfully say that I have ever done anything to hinder its progress or to inject any tinge of politics into the workings of this department."

"There is more to this great work, than merely catching the fish and the other game. There is a broader viewpoint and that is the one which entices me to do with the development and protection of lands and recreational facilities so that they will endure for the girls and the boys to come later on—conservation of that which our forefathers enjoyed, which we cherish and which will provide for those future generations, clean, wholesome recreation and healthful pursuits. That is the broad view of this work and to you men so enthusiastic in its promotion I can only say that what you do to aid its success is giving you active association with one of the greatest enterprises before us today."

The governor scored the Atwood relict land bill because he feared future generations would be deprived of their beaches and marshes. He said that there were many problems of conservation to be solved.

"Michigan now has a fine system. We want it improved and are doing everything possible in that direction. But the sportsmen must help. They must catch the spirit of this work. There is vastly more to it than filling the bag or reel every time out. Get the big viewpoint of it, practice what we preach and conservation as it advances is certain to protect our natural resources for posterity."

Plans for water carnival for the Tawas, to be held on the 4th, 5th and 6th of July, are being worked out and everything points to a real celebration. One of the biggest features will be the 18-piece band from West Branch which has been engaged and they will enjoy the program throughout the different days.

There will be dances and also a wonderful display of fireworks on each night. The baseball games are being arranged and will be with some of the fastest teams in this part of the state.

The Tawas Yacht Club has notified the committee that the following races have been arranged for the water carnival: Outboard motor race for classes A, B, C, D and E. The club will offer a handsome trophy cup for the best time made by an amateur during the races.

There will be suitable prizes for sailing race for cat boats. There will also be a race for fishing boats for prizes. Later on a list of the prizes will be given out.

Little Journeys in Americana

By LESTER B. COLBY

Pelathe, the Eagle

PELATHE, the Eagle, rides. Pity the chestnut mare. Pelathe rides to warn a city of impending disaster. He rides to warn sleeping Lawrence, Kansas, of massacre at dawn. For Quantrill, bushwhacker, wholesale murder in his heart, is riding west in a rage to burn and destroy.

All night Quantrill has been riding at the head of his 450 men. He has routed farmers out of bed to act as his guide. When he is done with a guide he shoots him. Dead men are safe—and silent. History says he murdered ten guides that night.

Quindaro is an outpost of Kansas City. Theodore Bartles, scout, holds the head of his chestnut mare. She is fleet, stout of heart, deep chested, a thoroughbred. Scout Bartles loves that mare but he is about to sacrifice her.

Pelathe, the Eagle, tosses a light blanket across her back. He needs no saddle. Every ounce of extra weight will count on this ride. The chestnut mare breaks into a full run. Pelathe, the Eagle, is riding. And Quantrill has a long head start.

Ten miles out of Quindaro and the little mare's breath is coming in sobs. Pelathe, the Eagle, talks soothingly. He caresses her; urges her on. Another mile or two and she begins to falter. Ah, a stream!

Pelathe, the Eagle, slips to the ground. He wets the end of his blanket and wipes her foaming mouth. He runs the damp cloth into her nostrils; over her head. Then he takes the dry end of the blanket and wipes her dripping legs and heaving flanks. He gives her a drink of water, just a drink—the last drink she shall ever have!

Pelathe takes her by the bridle, leads her to the top of the rise—gently. Pelathe, slender, bold, brave Shawnee Indian, knows horses; he knows how to get the last ounce of strength out of them. And this ride is to warn a city of impending doom.

Lightly the Eagle vaults to the back of the chestnut mare. She breaks into a run for the second time. Stronger now. She has gained her second wind. On, on, on to Lawrence, Kan., the doomed city. Can he make it ahead of Quantrill?

One mile after mile. Brave little mare. Only a few more miles now. She is faltering. Her sides tremble. Her legs weaken. She is going down. But Pelathe, the Eagle, knows a trick!

Cruel, inhuman! Yes, but a sleeping city must be warned of its doom. Pelathe, the Eagle, draws his knife. He rips the shoulders of Scout Bartles' beloved chestnut mare. Blood gushes and splatters on the ground. Pelathe rubs raw gunpowder into the flowing wounds.

Pain more intense than the pain from her bursting lungs flashes through the body of the gasping animal. Perhaps some chemical action on her blood gives strength. With a groan the chestnut mare springs forward. There is new power in her faltering legs. And a mile or so further is the village of the Delawares.

Will she make it? Bravely she runs. No, she falters again and with a moan drops dead!

Pelathe, the Eagle, lands on his feet—running. He dashes like a sprinter to the Delaware village. With a war-whoop to arouse the camp, he rushes to the corral. He cannot afford to be shot as a horse thief.

A word and he is on a fresh steed, a sturdy Indian pony. The quarter-moon is growing dimmer. Soon the sun will rise. Quantrill will strike at dawn. Now the dawn begins to come. God in Heaven!

Pelathe, the Eagle, looks down into the valley—on Lawrence. His ride has been in vain. Miles back, on the road from Quindaro, the little chestnut mare lies still in darkening blood. Too late!

In the light of the dawn Pelathe, the Eagle, looks upon burning houses. The screams of weeping women mingle with fierce oaths. Guns roar. Villagers, white lipped, see their last sunrise. The butchery that cost that August morning in 1863, not fewer than 150 lives, is on.

Quantrill and his men are making a shambles of Lawrence. Their cry to the ashen-faced, weeping, new-made widows is:

"We are devils from hell!"

Pelathe, the Eagle, sits on his pony, a statue in the dawn. His face is buried in his hands.

Napoleon Liked Theater But Bought Few Tickets

Whatever Napoleon might have thought of the two new films about him that have just been launched it is safe to assume that he would have demanded free seats to view them. For before he assumed a crown the little corporal was an inveterate "deadhead."

Passes made out to "Citizen Bonaparte" are preserved in the museum of the Theater Francais and the son of the famous Talma records that the great actor-manager used to find Napoleon lying in wait for him so often that he took to dodging down side curbs to avoid him.

"I see Bonaparte coming; he'll ask for seats," he would say, and vanish rapidly.—Manchester Guardian.

FOR PERSIAN MEN

Persia has adopted a new hat for men following a proclamation of the shah. President Daguare of the Persian parliament, is shown wearing the new hat, or "pahlavi," that bears some resemblance to a military cap.

USE FLOWERS ON SUMMER HATS; PICTURESQUE DINNER DRESSES

SUMMER posies have been transferred from the back yard to milady's chapeau, according to some models that are being shown. At a recent fashion show held in New York city flattering flower trimmings predominated, in accordance with the new feminine trend in costume. Marguerites, sun-flowers, nasturtiums, buttercups, daisies, pansies, asters—all of the brightest field flowers played a prominent part in the decoration for the hats.

In this collection probably the most striking was the large garden hat. Among others shown was a natural Tuscan straw, trimmed with bunches of bright flowers and a band of royal blue velvet ribbon; another was an almond green crinolin hair hat with peach and chartreuse buttercups on the left edge and side back of the crown.

At the upper left is shown a capucine bakou turban trimmed with shaded asters of felt. These are placed over the right ear. This is the only decoration used and brings the floral feature strongly into evidence.

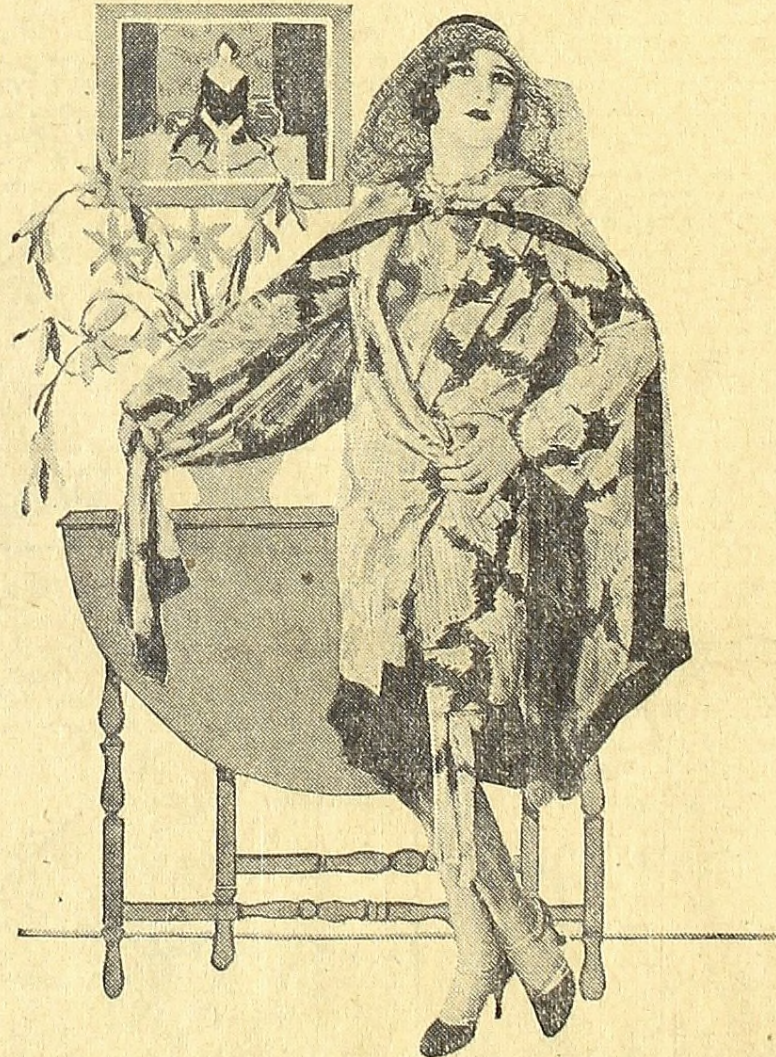

At the upper right is a capucine mushroom hat, closely woven. This departure from the small, close-fitting hat is a welcome change to almost every type of woman, as it serves as a splendid sunshade. The under part of the brim is lined with a silk in the darkest shade of the floral decoration, which is of shaded geraniums with pearl centers.

Rose bakou is the material in the hat shown at the lower left. The entire crown is covered with rose leaf petals tinted in green. The brim is Four Pretty Summer Hats.

On account of the elaborate design it is built along simple lines. However, an accordion plaited flounce adds a touch of fluffiness to the gown. The coat features an unusually large scarf-cape falling at each side almost to the bottom of the coat, and having a broad band of black around the entire scarf. Flared sleeves are used and soft lapels give the garment a truly coat instead of a jacket effect. A large lace hat, suede shoes with satin trimming and sheer hose complete this most charming outfit.

The dainty dinner gown, after all, is regarded as the closest relative of the afternoon frock. However, simplicity is the keynote with a great many women, and especially with the Parisienne. The latter, as well as the American women who buy their gowns in Paris, have a natural inclination toward the simple effects, and this desire brings the black dress to the fore. Satin or dull-surfaced materials may be the choice, but if it is the black gown, and usually it is, it is perfect, if not complicated in cut, but simplicity rules in silhouette, and is the essence of chic afternoon attire. With extremely wide and of the drooping type, shading the entire face.

A black rough straw afternoon hat is shown at the lower right. This also is a large hat, the left side of the brim being noticeably wider. Along the back and underneath the brim on the left side large white and yellow marguerites are flatly applied. The brim has a lining of black crepe, and it is a hat that will appeal to thousands of women.

Flowered dinner dresses afford a most pleasing diversion. And with a twin pattern coat of moire such an outfit surely will claim many friends and admirers. The lower picture shows a flowered red and black gown with a twin pattern moire coat. It is a delightful idea and it is promised a vogue for at least the present summer season.

these black gowns it is not uncommon to see touches of lace which at ways adds charm.

Short jackets are featuring the summer ensemble of foulard so popular in Paris this season. It is enhanced by its youthful, fresh and cool appearance, and small patterned material is much in the fashion picture, again emphasizing the Parisienne's choice for simplicity for garments for outdoor wear.

Tiny patterns that look like the foulard in ties that are worn by men mark some of the popular foulards used for dresses for town wear and which are worn at many of the resorts, and these are very much along the lines that are favored by the Paris elite.

Acidity

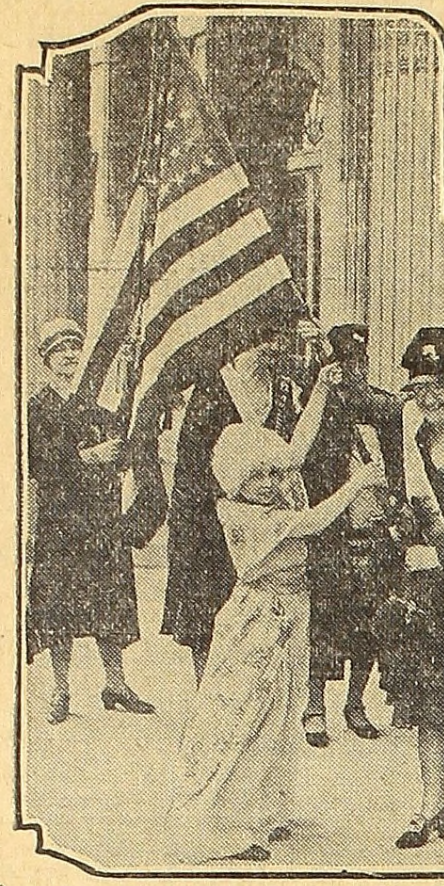

The common cause of digestive difficulties is excess acid. Soda cannot alter this condition, and it burns the stomach. Something that will neutralize the acidity is the sensible thing to take. That is why physicians tell the public to use Phillips Milk of Magnesia.

One spoonful of this delightful preparation can neutralize many times its volume in acid. It acts instantly; relief is quick, and very apparent. All gas is dispelled; all sourness is soon gone; the whole system is sweetened. Do try this perfect anti-acid, and remember it is just as good for children, too, and pleasant for them to take.

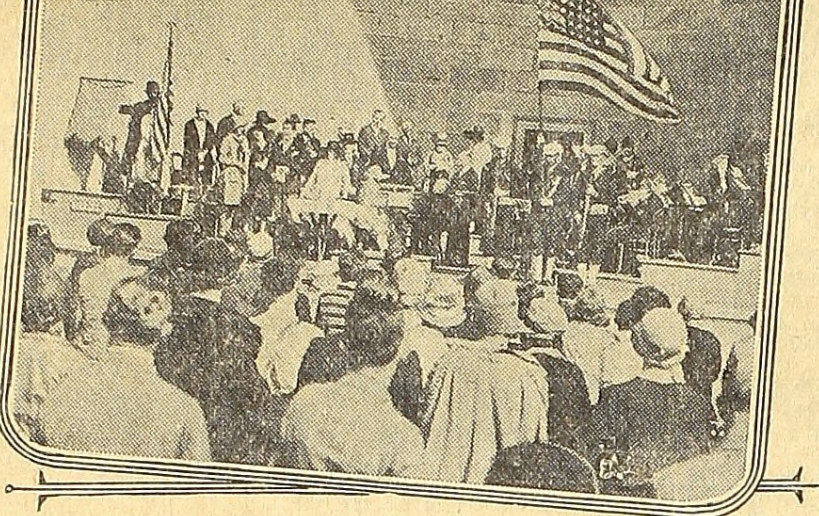

Any drug store has the genuine, prescriptive product.

Flag Day, 1929

Washington.—Mrs. Alfred J. Brosseau, former president general of the Daughters of the American Revolution is shown receiving an American silk flag from Miss Betsy Ross, direct descendant of the designer of the Stars and Stripes. Miss Ross represented the boys and girls of the United States in the American Flag Association's contest. The flag is the first one made entirely from American silk cocoons.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

S FLAG DAY, 1929, approaches it is interesting to note that this year marks the fortieth anniversary of the series of events which led to the establishment of June 14 as a day for a national observance in honor of the Stars and Stripes. The story of how a New York newspaper had a part in bringing this about is told by George H. Brennan in a letter to Editor and Publisher as follows:

The observance of Flag Day this year has revived the mooted question of the origin of the public display of the national colors on public buildings and on public schools of the United States. Who was responsible for this glorious stirring? What impetus generated this universal waving of the Stars and Stripes?

I feel emboldened to attempt an answer in your columns as to who started the patriotic ball a-rolling and the public display of Old Glory. It is just thirty-eight years ago this summer since the old New York Press aroused this country with its flag propaganda. I have recently, to fortify my memory, examined the bound files of the New York Press and I find that the New York Public Library, Frankly, was astonished at the conditions of public neglect therein set forth and the unanimity of distinguished public opinion developed in the flag propaganda of the Press.

The New York Press was then owned by a group of which James Phillips, Jr., of Fitchburg, Mass.; James R. Doudge of New York, and George West of Ballston, N. Y., were leading figures. Mr. Phillips had induced Clement M. Hammond, assistant managing editor of the Boston Globe, to become managing director of the New York Press, and Mr. Hammond had brought with him Thomas C. Quinn, also of the Boston Globe, as managing editor of the Press. Fred F. Burgin was city editor of the Press, and Louis J. Lams, later the biographer of Thomas A. Platt, and now a valued member of Mr. Hearst's forces, was acting Washington correspondent.

As I was aware at the time, the flag display idea was Mr. Quinn's and the work of convincing the Washington authorities for official sanction as to public buildings was Mr. Lang's. The propaganda encompassed the entire country with expressions of exultant co-operation from governors, congressmen, clergymen, school teachers, and other influential characters of the day. In July, 1889, William Windom, secretary of the treasury, and John Wanamaker, then postmaster general, were convinced, and from that day to this the Stars and Stripes have been displayed on every public building in the United States every day during office hours. In the rules of the Navy Department there had been from early times a rule for the display of the flag on public buildings of that department but this rule had fallen into more or less disobservance following the Civil war.

Such dissimilar characters as Rev. Dr. McArthur and Father McGlynn were aroused to leadership for the display of the flag on public schoolhouses—that glorious practice that is now a daily inspiration. The Press was not wholly satisfied evidently with the way that the then board of education of the city at first carried out its flag idea for on Tuesday, September 10, 1889, the day after the opening of the schools that year, its news story carried this significant paragraph:

"At every schoolhouse in the city the day was honored by the display of the American flag, either on the flagstaff or draped above the principal's desk. The one notable exception was at the board of education in Grand street where there is a flagstaff on the top of the building supplied with all the rope necessary. In spite of this the flag did not float there yesterday."

This hint was effective. Soon afterwards public school boards throughout the nation followed suit, usually one newspaper in each vicinity claiming the honor of causing the action, but the credit in the first instance

WISHBONE TURNED TO BACKBONE

BETTY OLLOWELL paused to read a line of advertising in the window of a bank: "Make your wishbone backbone," then she flounced on up the street, sounding a contemptuous little "nmp!" as she went.

Her eyes flashed. She was still aggressively antagonistic to the world in general, because of the uncalled-for blows she considered had been dealt her, when a moment later, she met Alyse Hayes.

"Hello Bet!" Alyse called out, beaming upon her friend. "What's wrong this morning? You look like a cannibal about to devour an unsuspecting missionary."

"I'll be forced to do just about that if my present state of pocket-book keeps up," Betty grumbled gloomily. "If I didn't have to be nurse as well as wage-earner, I could—"

"Betty Ollowell!" Alyse interrupted testily. "Perhaps it's none of my business but I'm here to tell you you'd better count your blessings. If my mother was spared to me and I was given the privilege of caring for her, nothing else would matter."

"Mothers, sick or well, have to be fed, don't they?" Betty retorted bitterly. "And they have to have medicines and extra comforts and things. How am I to get all those when I'm only able to work at home?"

"You try too hard and worry too much," Alyse answered kindly. "It un-fits you for giving your best. Plainly speaking, dear, it tells in your work. Mazie Walker's the kind that wouldn't say a word—she'll just take her next blouse to some one else but I love you, Bet, and want to see you throttle this monster that's dragging you down, so I'm going to tell you forgot to stitch in one sleeve of that blouse you made for Mazie and it ripped half way out while she was at a party."

Betty groaned aloud and tears came. "Oh, what's the use!" she finally said hopelessly. "I tried so hard on that blouse, I worried myself thin over it."

"There you are! Worry is the disease of the age—doctors admit it. It brings wrinkles, exhaustion, indigestion—what a preachment I'm wishing on you! Anyway, think it over, Bet. I'm on my way to inquire about opera tickets for Saturday."

"How I envy you! To have the price of opera tickets! Oh!"

"Haven't you got, but I'm sure if it's right for me to go, the price'll turn up from somewhere. Try a little of my philosophy sometime, Bet. Bye, bye."

Alyse went toward the city and Betty returned to her home, envy of Alyse ranking in her mind.

Try as she would, however, she could not forget Alyse's philosophy and advice. The longer she thought about it, the more she viewed it with favor and the less envious she became.

Poor little Betty! Stronger characters than she have gone down under a similar load; a suicide father, an empty treasury, an invalidated mother. Her only real asset was what her associates always had called her "fairy fingers." Betty could fashion a "Paris" hat or a "Drecoote" blouse from next to nothing.

Had she been content to confine her thought and effort to her dressmaking, all might have been well, but she grew restless. She who once had had thousands to draw upon found it hard to confine herself to less than hundreds.

When the money did not come as rapidly as she thought it should, she resorted to all sorts of side lines; sent in original crossword puzzles to all newspapers, supplied last lines to foolish limericks, named picture panels, furnished recipes, bright sayings, slogans and then allowed herself to waste many precious moments watching vainly for returns. It never seemed to occur to Betty that literally thousands of people all over the country were indulging in this same indoor sport every day.

She had just about resolved to give up wandering into the bypaths, and confine her best efforts to some lingerie she had received an order for, when she chanced to pick up a sheet of the Sunday paper announcing that a hundred dollars would be given to four persons each week, whose handwriting gave evidence of unusual character.

"Umph!" she thought contemptuously. "A new one. No use my trying that. My character is anything but unusual. Still—takes no time—only costs two cents—guess I'll fall again—just this one last time."

She mailed the coupon and almost immediately forgot the whole incident, so engrossed was she with the lingerie upon which she was at work. It happened to be the trousseau of a millionaire's daughter.

For the first time since her father's death she was able to put her heel upon the serpent of envy which had raised its head and hissed whenever she was at work upon luxuries for others. Instead, she dove into this soft, silken fabric which grew into lovely garments beneath her skillful fingers, beautiful, happy, hopeful dreams for the young girl who was to wear them.

In three days they were finished. Betty enjoyed them as one enjoys a beautiful picture but every now and then a little stab of fear pierced her consciousness when she realized that if she was not paid when these were delivered she must take the precious rent money to fill their almost empty larder.

Resolutely turning her back upon the demon of worry she wrapped the lovely things as attractively as she knew how and set out to deliver them.

A servant answered the door and told her that none of the family were in. Betty checked back the tears which already had begun and started home, bravely repeating to herself Alyse's philosophy: "If it's all right for me to take the rent money, I'll just take it. If it isn't, something else will turn up;" then she laughed aloud at the ridiculousness of her daring to think that she could apply that philosophy to her life.

The first thing that met her gaze when she reached home was a letter from the newspaper which dealt in prizes for penmanship and when she opened it a check for $100 dropped out. Accompanying the check was an analysis of her character, reached, supposedly, from her handwriting.

"Exceptionally talented but constantly belittles her own power. Too much given to unnecessary worry. Banishing that, this writer will soar to great heights unaided."

"Old Man Worry, here's where you and I part company forever!" Betty declared happily to herself. "My wishbone's turned to backbone after all."

To Alyse Hayes, buying opera tickets with money earned as special assistant to the handwriting expert of the Sunday Chronicle, there came a mental picture of Betty's face when she discovered the check for $100 and its accompanying character analysis. She smiled gratefully when she recalled how easy it had been to turn the tide of the expert's opinion in Betty's favor.

Lonely Places Lure Hunters of Big Game

Master of his own destiny while in the wilds of Africa, W. S. Chadwick, big game hunter, declares that he is fearful of large cities. Writing in Field and Stream he cites several experiences he had which made him realize that he preferred the lonely forests to the noisy civilized habitations of men. One particular case he mentions in this article is how he and a friend outwitted a local band of police, 12 in number under a captain. The police had been sent after him to the Belgian Congo to arrest him and take tribute on his quota of ivory. Hearing of their approach Chadwick and his mate dressed their "boys," 20 of them, in some extra khaki clothes they had. When the Congo police arrived they were stupefied to meet with a larger array of soldiers than themselves and decided the better part of valor would be to remain as amicable as possible. Chadwick points out in his Field and Stream article that if this happened at home the police captain would have merely blown a whistle and the arrest would have been made. The writer admits he enjoys being a man in a man's world where what one can do with brain and brawn marks him apart.

Gave It to Hinkler

The qualities needed by a successful airman have at last been precisely analyzed and clearly expounded. At a flying school in Australia notice was recently given to applicants for admission that they must first give proof of possessing inherent flying ability. Some of the candidates wanted to know in what this ability consisted. They were then told that "the pilot must possess the innate faculty of selective and instinctive discrimination of the stimuli of the sensorium apparatus to harmoniously adjust metabolic changes in physiological and psychological equilibrium in such manner as to comprehend and assimilate instruction in the attributes essential to perform the intricate and complex operations which constitute the details of piloting." Very properly they all exclaimed, as with one voice, "Hinkler has it!"—Manchester Guardian.

Cat Catches Rears Mouse

Confirming a scientist's declaration that animals are becoming more civilized, a cat at Manchester, England, caught a mouse and instead of making a meal of it, adopted it as a chum. The couple now share the same sleeping basket and pussy faithfully washes and plays with its charge. Their only separation was when the cat spent a few days with the veterinarian. On his return his excitement at meeting his little friend again was so great that it was feared that he had returned to primitive cathod, but the playmates soon settled down to their old companionship.

Red-Haired Celebrities

We find no reference in biographies to Caesar having red hair, though he was of fair complexion. Among others listed by various authorities as having had red hair are the following: Cato, Clovis, Frederick Barbarossa, William Rufus, Demetrius, Alfieri, Tasso, Queen Elizabeth, Red Douglas, Red Comyn, Otto H. Camoens, William H. Seward, Van Buren. A little biographical research would probably disclose numerous others.

Remarkable Formations

The Garden of the Gods is a region in Colorado near Colorado Springs, covering about 500 acres, and remarkable for the strange forms of the rocks with which it is covered. The red and white sandstone assumes grotesque shapes, to which various names have been given. For instance, the gateway is formed by two huge masses of rock of a bright red color, which are 330 feet high and between which the road passes.

SPRAY RESIDUE NOT INJURIOUS

Storage Qualities of Apples and Pears Not Impaired.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The washing of apples and pears with acidulated water, as practiced in the Pacific Northwest—to remove spray residue, apparently does not injure their storage quality, according to a survey of apples in storage recently made by the bureau of plant industry and the bureau of agricultural economics, United States Department of Agriculture.

In this survey, which was made in the later part of January and the first part of February, this year, 184 cars of western apples which were in storage in five of the principal markets, Chicago, Kansas City, St. Louis, Philadelphia, and New York, were inspected. Of these lots, 113 or 73.3 per cent showed no evidence of decay whatever and 3 lots or less than 2 per cent showed injury which might be attributed to washing. The type of injury common to these three lots resembled burning caused by soluble arsenic, which, according to the investigations carried on during the last two years by the bureau of plant industry, may occur on fruit not carefully rinsed. In one of these lots 23 per cent of the fruit was affected. In the other two carloads, the injury amounted to 8 per cent and 0.9 per cent, respectively; the fruit was not decayed and in most cases would be salable.

The results on the extent of washing injury are corroborated by the records of the bureau of agricultural economics' receiving-point inspections, made during the period September 1, 1928, to January 1, 1929, in which only 4 out of 541 cars of apples inspected showed evidences of injury due to washing.

It is evident that there is no danger of injury from the dilute solution of hydrochloric acid used in washing the fruit, provided it is handled with reasonable care. This method of cleansing was applied with satisfactory results to approximately 30,000 cars of apples this past season under a wide range of field conditions.

Grape Berry Moth Cause of Much Wormy Fruit

The grape berry moth is a rather common insect that causes the grape berries to be wormy. For the control, 1½ pounds of powdered arsenate of lead is mixed with 50 gallons of a 4-4-50 bordeaux mixture. This is made by dissolving 4 pounds of blue vitriol in 50 gallons of water, and with this is mixed 4 pounds of freshly hydrated lime. To the bordeaux-lead combination is added 1 pound of resin fish-oil soap that has been dissolved in a little water. The first application of this mixture should be made as soon as the berries have set. A second should be given just before the berries are large enough to touch one another in the cluster, while a third treatment should be given about two weeks later. Only enough bordeaux for each treatment should be made at one time as it deteriorates rather quickly.

Find Arsenate of Lead Is Harmful to Animals

In Washington and Oregon where they spray orchards with arsenate of lead it has been found that horses suffer with lead poisoning in a chronic form. In many cases it produces chronic roaring or paralysis of some of the nerves that supply the muscles of the larynx. This produces a roaring or whistling sound that is present when the horse or mule inspires air. Quite often a roaring horse or mule chokes down when pulling a heavy load or when tested by speeding. There are not a few roaring horses and mules in the South and it may be that the condition of some of them is caused by eating some of the lead arsenate that is used to dust cotton to kill the boll weevil. Some roarers are called chokers.

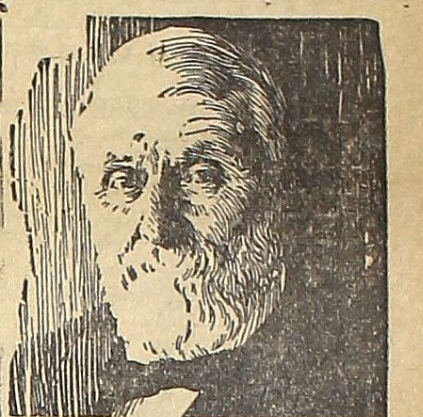

Spraying Outfit

The owner of a home orchard and garden feels that he can hardly afford to provide the expensive equipment used by the commercial grower for the control of insects and diseases. Consequently, he has to do with less equipment and put out a large proportion of labor in protecting his plants against the various injurious maladies.

There are two general types of spray outfits that can be used for home orchard and garden.

Cherry Varieties

Some of the leading commercial varieties of sweet cherries are both self-sterile and inter-sterile. For example, Napoleon, Bing and Lombard will not self-pollinate or cross-pollinate each other. Windsor, Black Republican, Governor Wood and Black Tartarian, on the other hand, not only appear to be inter-fertile, but are also good pollenizers for Napoleon, Bing and Lombard. The standard varieties of sour cherries are self-fertile and do not require cross-pollination.

OLD FOLKS SAY DR. CALDWELL WAS RIGHT

The basis of treating sickness has not changed since Dr. Caldwell left Medical College in 1875, nor since he placed on the market the laxative prescription he had used in his practice.

He treated constipation, biliousness, headaches, mental depression, indigestion, sour stomach and other indispositions entirely by means of simple vegetable laxatives, herbs and roots. These are still the basis of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, a combination of senna and other mild herbs, with pepsin.

The simpler the remedy for constipation, the safer for the child and for you. And as you can get results in a mild and safe way by using Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, why take chances with strong drugs?

A bottle will last several months, and all can use it. It is pleasant to the taste, gentle in action, and free from narcotics. Elderly people find it ideal. All drug stores have the generous bottles, or write "Syrup Pepsin," Dept. BB, Monticello, Illinois, for free trial bottle.

New Cinema Screen

Cinemas in three dimensions, a problem on which several fortunes have been spent in recent years, are achieved in an entirely new way by an English inventor who has developed a motion picture screen which has for its surface 900,000 tiny glass lenses, each barely a quarter of an inch across. The screen is made by first coating the usual surface with a thick layer of white lead and then affixing the glass globules to this white lead coating. This work is carefully done by hand.

The stereoscopic effect is then obtained with ordinary film and a standard projector, for the myriad tiny lenses split up the light into hundreds of thousands of minute beams which are individually magnified on the screen so that each lens gives depth in relief and produces the illusion that the spectator is looking around the object photographed.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

NOW—It Comes Ready-to-Serve!

I have often wondered if other housewives were, like me, exasperated over having to prepare Grapefruit for breakfast! Of course, we all want the family to have it—it's so delicious—and so good for them. But in the hurry of preparing breakfast and starting two lively youngsters off to school, I felt like I had been imposed upon every time I served Grapefruit. Now this is all over, for R-Grocer introduced me to something NEW. It's Grapefruit in cans—the well-known Light House Brand—and it's sweeter and better than the fresh fruit. R-Grocer tells me this is because the fruit is sun-ripened and then canned as soon as it is picked. Each can contains the hearts of five grapefruits. I use it for delicious fruit cups and salads, and tempting beverages. No more hurrying—work—or waste! And it is so Good!

WRITTEN COMPOSITION

By M. LOUISE CROSBY

Beautiful speech has heretofore been considered more a social than a business asset, excepting for the learned professions. Today, the desire for better English is a sign of the times. It is now, not only more than ever a social necessity, but something that is demanded in the business and industrial world. "Better Speech, Better Business," an article published recently in one of our popular magazines, sets forth the views of a number of representative business men as to the necessity for the use of correct and even beautiful English by the young men whom they employ in responsible positions.

As a result of the demand for Americans who are better trained in the use of their own language, many new methods have been devised for short cuts which are interesting and can be helpful; but no labor-saving device will ever replace the method used by Lincoln in learning to write. Lincoln's best writing can stand beside the best that has ever been done, and we have his own testimony that he took the pains to study grammar. He wrote compositions, irrespective of his own personal interest in them; he revised and rewrote these until he was satisfied that they were the best he could do. The books he read some of our students would call dull but from them he acquired a vocabulary that enabled him to give grace and beauty to his speech. This is, after all, the only way to learn to write; to learn the principles of writing and then to write, revise, and rewrite; to read books that are written in clear, good English, that will provide wealth and beauty of vocabulary and models of excellent writing.

The following themes are good examples of the written work done in one of our English classes. These were chosen by dividing the class into groups, having the pupils read their themes to their group.

It is a very warm, sunny, spring day and two Freshmen boys, the very best of pals, are sitting in the High School Assembly room and waiting for the hour of dismissal. One of them, George, is studying vigorously, while the other one, Fred, is idling away his time and occasionally glancing out the window with an eager look of desiring to be out in the warm sunshine in his dreamy eyes. School is dismissed and we lose sight of the two friends until the next day, when we see one of the same boys, namely George, happily wending his way to the school, but we see nothing of Fred. By a conversation among the boys in the hall, we hear that Fred has quit school, and is looking for a job. This was a mere boyish whim which he tried to pacify by trying his success in our great business world. Many of the boys were envying him, not thinking of the great mistake that he was making.

Four years have passed since that day and we see the same boys and the same school only each has

Joan of Arc

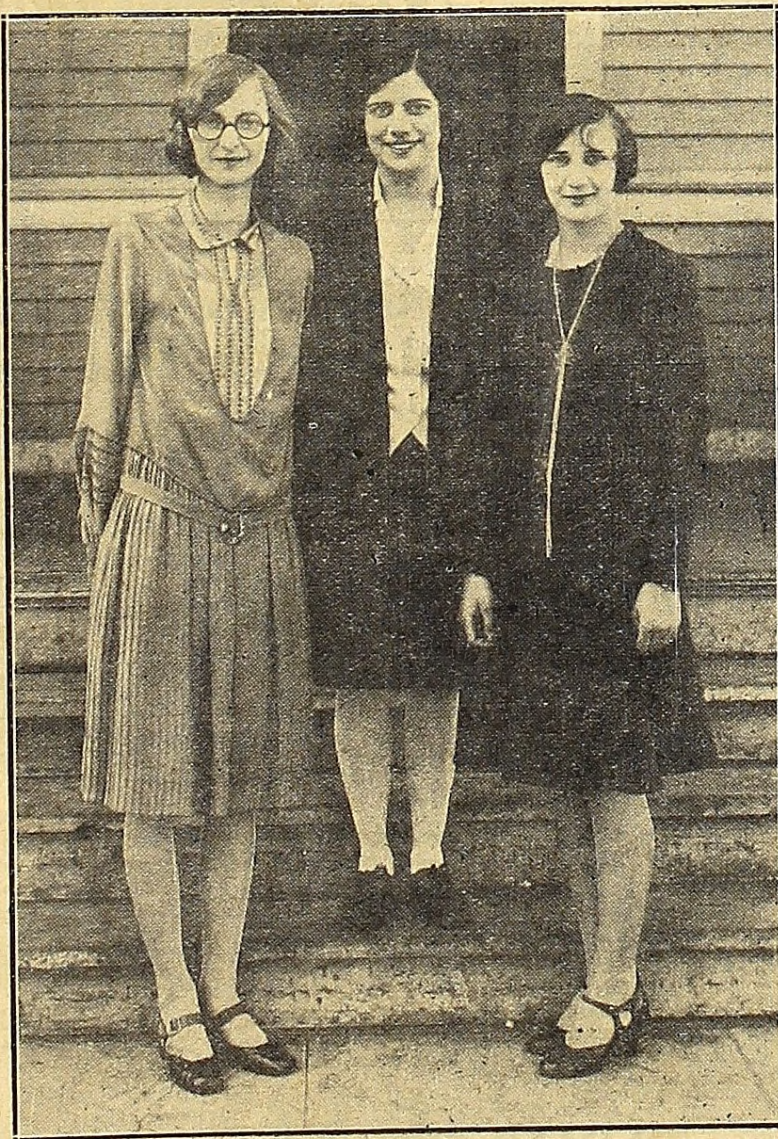

DELTA LESLIE

What is to be thought of her? What is to be thought of the poor shepherd girl from the hills and forests of Lorraine, that, like the Hebrew shepherd boy from the hills and forests of Judea, rose suddenly out of the quiet, out of the safety, out of the religious inspiration, rooted in deep pastoral solitudes, to a station in the van of armies, and to the more perilous station at the right hand of kings? The Hebrew boy inaugurated his patriotic mission by an act, by a victorious act, such as no man can deny. But so did the girl of Lorraine, if we read her story as it was read by those who saw her nearest. Adverse armies bore witness to the boy as no pretender; but so they did to the gentle girl. Judged by the voices of all who saw them from a station of good-will, both were found true and loyal to any promises involved in their first acts. Enemies it was that made the difference between their subsequent fortunes. The poor, forsaken girl, on the contrary, drank not herself from that cup of rest which she had secured for France. She never sang together with the songs that rose in her native Domremy, as echoes to the departing steps of invaders. She mingled not in the festal dances of Vancoleurs, which celebrated in rapture the redemption of France. No, for her voice was then silent. No, for her feet were dust.

Pure, innocent, noble-hearted girl, whom from earliest youth, ever I believed in as full of truth and self-sacrifice, this was amongst the strongest pledges for thy side, that never once—no, not in a moment of weakness—didst thou revel in the vision of coronets and honor from man. Coronets for thee? Oh, no! Honors, if they come when all is over, are for those that share thy blood. Daughter of Domremy, when the gratitude of the king shall awaken thou wilt be sleeping the sleep of the dead. Call her, king of France, but she will not hear thee! Cite her by thy applauders to come and receive a robe of honor, but she will be found in contumace. When the thunders of universal France as even yet will happen, shall proclaim the grandeur of the poor shepherd girl, will have been dead for five centuries.

Great was the throne of France even in those days, and great was he that sat upon it; but well Joan knew that not the throne, nor he that sat upon it, was for her; but, on the contrary, that she was for them; not she by them, but they by her, should rise from the dust. Gorgeous were the lilies of France, and for centuries had the privilege to spread their beauty over land and sea, until, in another century,

ORATORY AND DECLAMATORY WINNERS

THE VALUE OF CONTESTS

By LURISSA M. FORSTEN

As we, during the course of a school year, attend from three to five contests, not taking into consideration the athletic meets, it is but proper that we stop and consider whether or not they are of value to the school.

The following is an extract from the eighth annual state contest announcement of the Michigan Education Association: "Competitive stimulus is one of the best motivating forces in teaching. Aside from definite preparation for an actual position, competition does more than any other influence to promote interest, to induce practice, and to inspire students to do their best. It takes them out of the realm of the artificial into the field of actuality. It puts students on their mettle, furnishes them with a real problem. When carried on as a means to improve scholarship, contests have a real value."

Life as it is lived today in the world of keen competition is more or less a never-ending contest in which the person most fitted to win succeeds in attaining first place. He may not have the most keen intellect nor the most training but in competition with his fellow men, in his dealings with them he must show his superiority or fail. This holds good also in school contests. A pupil may be able to go by himself and translate the most difficult passage of Latin or solve the most intricate mathematical problem but when put face to face with the same problem with different environment and in competition with people of his own age and experience he is unable to keep his mind on the task before him and fails in its solution. This is particularly true of small schools having small classes. The contest then helps the enrolling student to overcome self-consciousness and forget self in solving the given work.

The by-products of these contests, the spirit of loyalty, fair play, honesty, and team work, would alone justify the continuance of our participating in them even though there were no scholastic values, for these virtues, are very necessary if the pupils live successful lives.

Looking at the other side of the question there are many disadvantages which we must aim to overcome. There is the danger of forgetting everything except the desire to win; the training of the brilliant few to the neglect of the many; the neglect of more general knowledge. There is also the danger of measuring the ability of teachers by the number of contests won and this leads to the outside training of students to prepare them to win which is contrary to the rules of these contests. In other words there is the danger of considering the contest as an end rather than as a means to better school work.

Soon afterward the girls of the high school were called into that room. "This is Miss Greene of the State 4-H Club Department." Thus the lady of the business-looking satchel was introduced to us. Miss Greene explained the club work to us and it was soon decided that we would form a 4-H Sewing club. The girls that had taken the work last year, decided to continue with second year work. Thus a double club was formed.

In our first meeting our attendance was large. We invited the girls of the eighth grade to join our club, Sew-So, as we called it, and they accepted that invitation. Senior boys, having decided they were to be bachelors all their lives, joined our club, if just for the purpose of learning to sew buttons to the places where they belong.

Our leader, Mrs. Forsten, having explained our year's work thoroughly, our club, with a smooth sea on which to sail, embarked for that good port that really was not so far distant.

By the time of the mistletoe and holly we were making presents for our friends. And lucky was the person who received one of those gifts for they were really the achievements of our best efforts. Here it must be sadly added, our boys dropped from our club, having decided they would invent an electric button sewer which would save much of their valuable time.

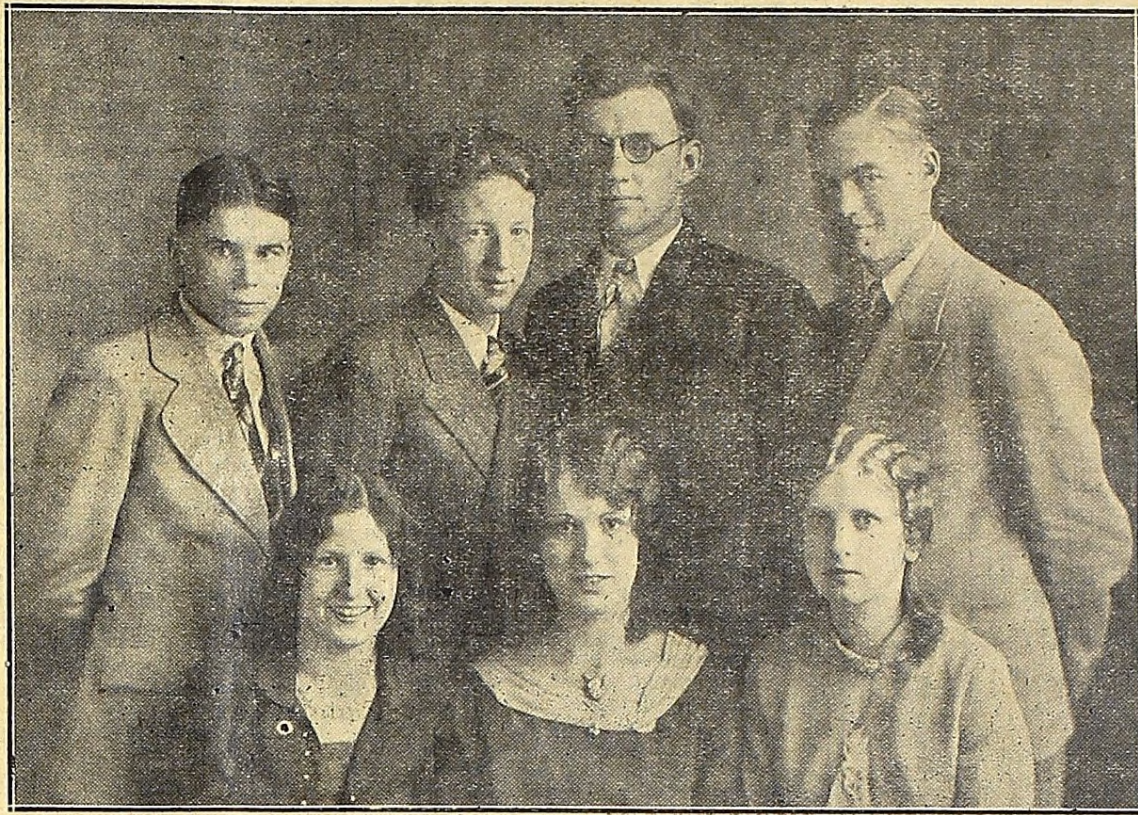

In the middle of February we began to make our "T" quilt—big red T's on a white ground. On each little block we embroidered someone's name. This quilt was to be given to the person holding the number drawn at our carnival. Our quilt and the names we embroidered on it raised much money and was one of the leading attractions of our carnival.

While our quilt was in the making, a quilting party was given. In the olden days, they say, the fun of the season was to be had at one of the old-fashioned quilting parties, but even then I don't believe they could have had more fun than did we at ours.

Another party was held at the school house early in April. This party is even yet referred to as one of the "best times." The Sewing girls, do, certainly, know how to have a good time.

And now all these good times are past. Our garments which we have worked on so faithfully are completed and our Achievement Day is here. We have reached that port for which we set sail but let us not be contented to remain at this port only, for there are many more to which we may go. May we sail as smoothly through the second, third and even fourth years of sewing as we have this, always remembering our motto—"As you sew, so shall you rip."

OUR SEWING CLUB

By BESSIE METCALF

It was the middle of October. All was quiet in the assembly room. An unusual hush hung over the pupils. The bright-colored landscape seen through the open windows seemed still and quiet. The hazy atmosphere of autumn was above and over all.

Suddenly the quiet was interrupted by a brisk knock at the door. Instantly, the pupils awoke from their day-dreaming with a start to see just who it was that had interrupted their pleasures. A lady carrying a satchel that looked very business-like entered the room. She was shown into our commercial room.

Soon afterward the girls of the high school were called into that room.

"This is Miss Greene of the State 4-H Club Department." Thus the lady of the business-looking satchel was introduced to us. Miss Greene explained the club work to us and it was soon decided that we would form a 4-H Sewing club. The girls that had taken the work last year, decided to continue with second year work.  Mrs. Forsten—"By the questions he would ask."

HEALTH ESSENTIALS FOR STUDENTS

By CARL BABCOCK

It has been said that over-work along the educational line is often detrimental to the health. I think you will agree with me when I say there has been very little illness through the past year originating from this source. It will be found, rather, that it has been caused by improper habits or no habits in the care of the body.

There are three important factors to be taken into consideration—healthy health habits. They are, work, play and sleep.

There is an old adage which says, "When you play, play hard, but when you work, don't play at all." The amount of work done by the average individual in school is not sufficient to cause disastrous results but the recreation should be picked accordingly; that is to say, a person who sits in school all day should participate in some game, after school, or other physical exercise. If the school is of sufficient size, in all probability it will offer gymnasium classes enough to supply the necessary exercise. There is such a thing as making work seem play as taking enough interest in it to make it seem like play. If work is gone at with this attitude, there will be less fatigue.

I did not include eating in the important factors for good health because the eating depends a great deal on the work and play. There are rules set down by men in that business, telling people what to eat. Everybody, regardless of their work, should follow these rules to some extent. That is to say, follow the same ratio. A man who works hard at some job which requires physical effort must eat heavier foods than the mental worker but in the same proportion.

Eight hours of sleep is necessary for everybody and more is less harmful than less, although when taken into extremes will cause laziness. It is understood, nevertheless, that young children should have more.

Care should be taken of the eyes and ears as well as the rest of the body but should be taken up by a specialist, and also a dentist should be seen every six months. There are several small precautions which should be taken around the home concerning these more delicate parts of the body.

The American College

By ELVERA KASISCHKE

When the Puritan emigrated from England to America it was a religious conviction that had brought about his exile from the Mother Country. He was still in all other respects an Englishman of the times, in whom was deeply engrafted a love for English institutions. Consequently, when he landed upon the shores of New England he carried there the English tradition and education. The schools which he had known at home he transplanted to America; and it is not strange that the university, his alma mater, the latest to touch him educationally, and the one which touched him the deepest should have been among the first to take root.

The first important move originated not through individual subscription but through an action of the general court of Massachusetts, which resulted in the foundation of Harvard College. Money was appropriated by the general court but for some unknown reason the money was not turned in and the overseers were just beginning to give the matter serious attention, when a clergyman, John Harvard, by name, died in Charleston bequeathing one-half of his property and his entire library to the institution. Although the general court had taken action two years before, nothing very important had been accomplished, and we probably may ascribe the real beginning of the college to John Harvard's bequest.

The story is told that one of President Eliot's predecessors who was president of Harvard from 1869 to 1909 was accustomed to conclude his chapel prayers by asking the Lord to "bless Harvard College and all inferior institutions." We know this prayer certainly has been answered, as Harvard has prospered beyond all anticipation and the inferior institutions have been blessed even more abundantly.

Another successful college that was founded around this time is Yale. Early in the summer of 1701 Reverend James Pierpont, a Harvard graduate, and Abraham Pierpont became convinced that the time had come for the establishing of a second college in New England, and entered into communication with other interested persons in southern Connecticut, and brought about a meeting at Branford to consider

DESCRIPTION SENIORS' TRIP TO NIAGARA

By BRUCE MYLES

Thursday, May 23, at about five o'clock in the morning, the Senior class of Tawas City High School left for Niagara Falls. Although the sky was overcast, and a light rain was falling, the spirit of the class was anything but damp and gloomy.

The first stop was caused by the same factor that causes many a tourist's pulse to slow down and temperature to rise; that is, tire trouble. This incident occurred near Pinconning, and while waiting there Mr. Giddings changed the oil in his car. All then proceeded through Bay City, Saginaw, Flint, Lapeer and when approaching Inlay City we again had car trouble. This time it was the motor, and this necessitated a wait of about an hour. We then continued our journey to Port Huron, arriving there just in time to immediately get aboard a ferry. We received a permit on the ferry which gave us permission to travel through Canada.

After we arrived at Sarnia, we were examined by the Canadian inspectors and allowed to proceed. The next important stop was at London. We there stopped at an oil station to inquire the way to Hamilton, and when a shrill whistle blew we were informed by the attendant that it was on a brewery. We next drove to Paris, where we remained for the night. This city is located in a valley, and when we came within sight of it, all all thought that a beautiful sight was before us.

The next day was Friday, May 24, and was a holiday for the Canadians; that is, they were celebrating Queen Victoria's birthday. The stores were closed, the flags were flying and fireworks were much in evidence. It reminded one, in fact, of the American Fourth of July.

We drove from Paris to Hamilton, and from there to our destination. The first sight which we obtained of the Falls was the Canadian portion. We drove along the side of the cataract, and proceeded to take pictures and enjoy the beautiful scenery. We then decided to take a trip under the Canadian Falls. It was necessary for each to dress in rubber boots, coat and hat. An elevator then lowered us into passages from which we could enjoy the scenery more than we could from above.

After this trip, which we all enjoyed, the class drove across the international bridge to Niagara Falls, New York. The first thing that we did here was to eat dinner, and then we "took in the city." We found the American Falls to be much smaller than those on the Canadian side.

We then returned across the bridge, and remained until evening. A class meeting was then held to determine whether to remain at the Falls for the night or to leave. The vote stood five to two in favor of leaving for Hamilton. The two were Carl and Jean, who had just returned from a ride in "The Maid of the Mist," and so were much enthused with the scenery.

We next left for Hamilton, and upon arrival there we proceeded to find a hotel. After supper some of the boys took a street car ride about the city, while the rest of the class did various other things. Leaving Hamilton the next morning, we drove to London and then to Sarnia. The homes along the way through this particular country were beautiful, and the farms seemed fertile and well conducted. The policemen in the cities were dressed as they are in England, and consequently were a sort of a curiosity to us.

After reaching Sarnia, we again crossed on the ferry to Port Huron where we ate dinner. We then drove to near Forestville, where Mr. Giddings had a flat tire. After this was repaired, we proceeded to about eleven miles from Gageton, where Freddie Wright's car "burned out a rod." Mr. Giddings purchased a rope of a farmer, and towed the damaged car to Gageton, where it was taken to a garage.

We then decided that Carl, Howard, Fred and myself should stay in Gageton until the car was repaired, and the rest should go on home in the other car. And so we separated. Mr. Giddings arrived home late Saturday night. The rest of the boys drove to Bay City that night after the car was fixed, and remained there until morning. They arrived in Tawas City the next day at about noon. All are firmly convinced that this was the most wonderful trip that it was possible for us to take.

the wrath of God and man combined to wither them; but well Joan knew, early at Domremy she had read that bitter truth, that the lilies of France would decorate no garland for her. Flower nor bud, bell nor blossom, would ever bloom for her.

Never, from the foundation of the earth, was there such a trial as this, if were laid open in all its beauty of defence, and all its malignity of attack. O child of France, shepherdess, peasant-girl, trodden under foot by all around thee, how I honor thy flashing intellect,—quick as lightning, and as true to its mark,—that ran before France and laegard Europe by many a century, confounding the malice of the ensnarer, and making dumb the oracles of falsehood! "Would you examine me as a witness against myself?" was the question by which many times she defied their arts. The result of this trial was the condemnation of Joan of Arc to be burned alive. Never did grim inquisitors doom to death a fairer victim by baser means.

Women, sisters! there are some things which you do not execute as well as your brother, man; no, nor ever will. Yet, sister, woman! cheerfully, and with the love that burns in depths of admiration, I acknowledge that you can do one thing as well as the best of men,—you can die grandly! On the twentieth of May, 1431, being then about nineteen years of age, Joan of Arc underwent her martyrdom. She was conducted before midday, guarded by eight hundred spearmen, to a platform of prodigious height, constructed of wooden billets, supported by occasional walls of lath and plaster, and traversed by hollow spaces in every direction, for the creation of air currents.

With an undaunted soul, but a meek and saintly demeanor the maiden encountered her terrible fate. Upon her head was placed a mitre, bearing the inscription, "Relapsed heretic, apostate, idolatress." Her piety did play itself in the most touching manner to the last, and her angelic forgetfulness of self was manifested in a remarkable degree. The executioner had been directed to apply his torch from below. He did so. The fiery smoke rose upwards in billowy volumes. A monk was then standing at Joan's side. Wrapt up in his sublime office, he saw not the danger, but still persisted in his prayers. Even then, when the last enemy was racing up the fiery stairs to seize her, even at that moment did this noblest of girls think only for him, the one friend that would not forsake her—and not for herself; bidding him with her last breath to care for his own preservation, but to leave her to God. "Go down," she said, "lift up the cross before me, that I may see it in dying, and speak to me pious words to the end!" Then protesting her innocence, and recommending her soul to Heaven, she continued to pray as the flames leaped up and walled her in. Her last audible word was the name of Jesus. Sustained by faith in Him in her last fight upon the scaffold she had triumphed gloriously; victoriously she had tasted death.

Few spectators of this martyrdom were so hardened as to contain their tears. All the English, with the exception of a few soldiers who made a jest of the affair, were deeply moved. The French murmured that the death was cruel and unjust. "She dies a martyr!" "Ah, we are lost, we have burned a saint!" "Would to God that my soul were with hers!" Such were the exclamations on every side. A fanatic English soldier, who had sworn to throw a fagot on the funeral-pile, hearing Joan's last prayer to her Saviour, suddenly turned away, a penitent for life, saying everywhere that he had seen a dove, rising upon white wings to heaven from the ashes where she stood.

THE AMERICAN COLLEGE

The project. Tradition says that each appeared at the conference with one or more books which were given as a foundation of the institution. On October sixteenth, a charter was granted for a collegiate school by the legislature at New Haven. Such was the beginning of another of our greatest colleges.

Then came the great struggle for independence, and after that there was manifested a surprising interest in education. This interest was continued and carried on until at the beginning of the twentieth century there were no less than four hundred and sixty-four colleges and universities for men or for both sexes, one hundred and thirty-four of which admitted men only to their under-graduate work, while three hundred and thirty admitted both men and women on equal terms. It is true that educational advancement cannot be measured solely in numbers of institutions; but except for some few limited regions, the growth in number of these schools of higher learning seems not to have exceeded the legitimate demands, and on the whole has been a healthy one, and has extended quite fully to all parts of our country.

Having heard about the beginnings and interest in colleges, the question quite readily comes to us, "Of what purpose are the colleges?" Taking this into consideration we find that the primary one is to give a liberal education. But at once the question emerges: "What is a liberal education?" Let us go back to the seventeenth century and see what the great poet Milton has to say in this respect. He says: "Liberal education is that which fits a man to perform justly, skillfully, and magnanimously all the offices, both private and public, of peace and war." Coming to the present day it is sometimes said that the liberally educated man is the thinker—that is, one who can reason, and judge things properly. But there are men whose minds are very accurate in their movements and yet can never be judged guilty of having a liberal education.

The man of liberal education is more than either the scholar or the thinker. He has entered the arena of learning, yet he is not encumbered with the treasures which he bears forth. United with this mind of the liberally educated man is a heart of sympathy, and an appreciation of the beautiful. The ministry of art is real ministry to him. He feels a great piece of music or the dim spaces of a cathedral. He has a mind to see and feel the grand and the beautiful. Every faculty, act, every function is complete. Reason plus simplicity, plus appreciation equals fullness of life which is the man himself liberally educated.

If the primary purpose of the college is to give a liberalizing education, a secondary purpose is to make men of efficiency. The man of efficiency is the one who does the most and the best in ways most economical. He represents service in every profession. The value of the efficiency of this training is made evident in the various professions, such as ministry, teaching, law, medicine and journalism, where college graduates are fast replacing those who do not have such a good education.

The efficiency of the college man is, of course, a result naturally expected. People differ and must differ in their judgment of the value of the different methods in education, but it is significant that there is a hearty agreement to the value of the higher education for a man who is to enter any employment requiring a high degree of efficiency.

I will add that it is also the purpose of the ideal college to make the student a citizen of the universe. This function in making him a scholar in democracy is a most important one. He is required in every field. In all processes of the democracy, legislative, judicial, civil political, commercial, and domestic, a good thinker is needed. The presence on the statute books of laws which can be interpreted in opposite ways, and the presence of laws promoting the very evils which they are designed to cure, are proofs that the absence of the thinker is a serious misfortune.

Because of these purposes, college training is very important and of great value to all of us. This is best expressed by Professor Hyde of Bowdoin College, who says: "To be at home in all lands, and ages; to count nature an intimate friend; to co-operate with others for common ends; to learn manners from students who are gentlemen, and form characters under professors who are Christians;—these are the returns of a college for the best four years of one's life."

grown a little older. Fred has been having a hilarious time, while his chum has been steadily working and now preparing for graduation. Meanwhile, through the influence of a friend, Fred has received an excellent position and one which paid him exceptionally good wages. But we all know that after we secure a good job our next problem is to keep it, or hang on to it, as some might say, and this great proposition our young friend was in no way prepared to face. He had left High School as a Freshman and now he was lacking training. Alas, as a result of this inefficiency, he lost his eminent position in the business world. Not long after graduation his best friend, George, secured the position and because of his good training gained during his High School career, he was able to cope with the problems of keeping it, and through his tireless energy, he was promoted and now holds one of the best positions in the city.

The two friends were together innumerable times after that and Fred was always ready to say how sorry he was that he had quit school and that he never would advised anyone to follow the unfruitful course which he had taken.

This is only one example. In many other cases, it may have been by one of our own friends, the same path has been followed, and afterwards we know that they have been heartily sorry for their mistake. So as a ward of advice to the High School students, I may add, "Never be discouraged, even though the road is rough, and hard examinations are given, all will be to your benefit in the end."—By Elvera Kasischke.

A letter from a Freshman to a friend explaining why the latter should attend Tawas City High School next year:

Tawas City, Michigan
Dear Gertrude:
There are many reasons, which I shall attempt to explain, why you should attend school at Tawas City High School the coming school term.
The Tawas City High School has been classed as an accredited school by the University of Michigan, and I think it is justly accredited. The teachers of this school are qualified to fill the positions assigned to them.
This school offers commercial work, math, science, and English and Latin literature. It has a fire escape and fire-drills.
For sports, this school has baseball and track at present. They are hoping to put a tennis court in this spring, and as I know that you are interested in this game, it will be one attraction to this school.

The school building is well-lighted, in reference to windows and electric lights.
The school tries to interest its pupils by having parties quite often.
I have found during my stay here at this school, that it is quite nice in all things, including teachers and pupils.
I hope you will consider these things favorably and decide to come to our school next year.
Your loving friend,
Leona Ulman.

Science "Brings Back" Dead

Detroit, Mich.—John Jones, a negro, twenty-two years old, suspected of being a holdup man, was shot as he dived out of an alley in a running battle with the police, and died twice.

He was removed to the receiving hospital, where he died before the police could question him and secure information regarding holdups which they were sure he could furnish.

Death had cheated the law, for dead men tell no tales.

Science then stepped in and cheated death. Dr. Courtney Fremont, a member of the hospital staff, injected a charge of adrenalin into the heart muscle of the man who had been dead about half an hour and he came back to life.

Bringing persons back from the grave to live again is no longer a novelty. It has been done scores of times. When the miracle was first performed it received little publicity.

city it did at first, and even spectacular events such as the Detroit incident pass almost unnoticed.

The first case on record in which a baby born dead was brought back to life occurred in a Brooklyn hospital. Mrs. Bertha Isaacson gave birth to twins, a boy and a girl, at the Boro Park Maternity hospital. The boy, weighing three pounds, was born dead.

Both infants were fed with a medicine dropper and were raised in an incubator until they had attained sufficient growth.

TREES

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

We were rushing along through the flat semi-barren lands of Montana. Great stretches of prairie land, gray with sage brush, spread out before us.

There was an unobstructed view across the plain to the rocky buttes along the horizon. To a middle-westerner used to trees and gardens gay with flowers it was a cheerless, almost depressing scene.

A man from Alaska was sitting across the aisle from me looking out gloomily upon the waste of bad lands. "They can have the whole d-d place for all of me," he remarked to me finally.

Handless Woman Pilots Plane

Los Angeles.—With stubs only six inches long to serve as arms, Miss Josephine Callaghan, twenty-two-year-old wealthy rancher and sportswoman, recently graduated from the "stunt class" at Dyer airport when she piloted her plane alone through all the maneuvers required in the post-graduate division.

Miss Callaghan bought a Lincoln-Page biplane when she was allowed to solo after 30 hours of instruction from Charles F. Dyer, chief pilot for the Dyer School of Commercial Aeronautics.
