"Pilot," said Judge Albert Stephens, "in the absence of our bailiff, leavthe controls for a moment and come back here and call this court to order.' And so was opened the first aerial court in the history of the country-in fact the highest court in the world. For when it was opened it was cruising toward San Francisco 7,000 feet above Los Angeles county in a Western Air Express plane. As soon as Judge Stephens became accustomed to the hum of the three motors, he began taking testimony in the condemnation suit brought by the county against the San Gabriel Canyon Development company, to force the latter to give up gold claims near the site of the great San Gabriel dam.

"Proclaim Liberty Throughout All the Land--"

The Voice of the Nation BY ORDER OF THE ASSEMBLY OF THE PROVINCE OF PENNS July 4, 1776

The above is a reproduction of a souvenir of the Centennial exposition held in Philadelphia in 1876. It shows the Declaration of Independence in the form of the Liberty Bell. It was handset in the smallest pearl size type, from which an electrotype was made in the type foundry of MacKellar, Smith and Jordan in Philadelphia. Thousands of these printings from the electrotype were distributed at the Centennial.

SK the average American what took place on July 4, 1776, and he will probably reply in some such words as these: "Why, the Declaration of Independence, which made us free from England was written by Thomas Jefferson and John Hancock, George Washington, and some others. Then in celebration of the event they rang the Liberty bell until it cracked wide open." And that represents pretty well the sum of the misinformation which many of us have upon the historic event from which we date the beginning of our nation.

On June 7, 1776, Richard Henry Lee, delegate to the Second Continental Congress from Virginia, acting under his instructions from that colony, presented a resolution declaring that "these United Colonies are, and of right ought to be, free and independent states." This resolution was de bated in congress for nearly a month and a vote on it was deliberately deferred until it seemed certain that the restrictions placed upon delegates from other colonies would be so modified that there would be a unanimous or almost unanimous approval of the resolution when it was put to a vote in congress.

On July 2, 1776, Lee's resolution was put to a vote and approved by the delegates of twelve of the colonies. The only silent voice was that of the New York delegation. The Declaration was penned by Thomas Jefferson and offered to congress, sitting as a committee of the whole, for revision before its adoption.

On July 4, 1776, the Declaration of Independence, as revised, was adopted by the delegates from the colonies with the exception of the New York representatives. The men who had voted for the Declaration of Independence realized that it would be nothing more than a scrap of paper unless it received popular support and received it immediately. So arrangements were made at once to have the document put before the public in the form of a broadside. Therefore, after recording the vote on the main question, it was "Ordered, That the Declaration be authenticated and printed; That the Committee appointed to prepare the Declaration, superintend and correct the press, That copies of the Declaration be sent to the severa. Assemblies, Conventions and Committees. or Councils of Safety, and to the several commanding officers of the Continen- | losophical society. The man who read tal troops; That it be proclaimed in | it to the assembled people was Col. each of the United States and at the head of the Army."

It was late in the afternoon of Thursday, July 4, when this action was taken, so the committee, composed of Thomas Jefferson, John Adams and Benjamin Franklin immediately hastened from the state house on Chestnut street, in Philadelphia, to a little building on High street, where Dunlap and Claypoole conducted a print shop. These printers were prepared to do "rush jobs." They had put out broadsides immediately after the Battles of Lexington, Bunker Hill, and upon receipt of the news of the disasters at Ticonderoga and Quebec. So they at once set to work and gave consider these simple chronological their personal attention to the setting facts in regard to the making of the in type of this greatest of all documents, which had fallen to their lot to print. Since the printing of it had to have official supervision, Jefferson, Adams and Franklin stayed in the shop until the Declaration was set in type and the first proof of it was pulled. They then made corrections on this proof, (the major responsibility for catching any errors resting on Franklin, no doubt, since he was a practical printer) and remained in the shop until this Magna Charta of American liberties had been placed on the old flat hand-press and was being

> On July 5, 1776, when congress met again, a supply of these printed copies of the Declaration were on hand, and one of them was "wafered" in the blank space left for it in the rough "Journal of Congress" before the reading of the minutes of the preceding day took place. In the meantime letters transmitting the Declaration to the various assemblies had been prepared by John Hancock, president of congress, his signature attested to by Charles Thompson, secretary, and some of these were printed on July 5 and the remainder some days later. The first one was sent to the Committee of Safety of Pennsylvania, dated July 5 and delivered to the committee on July 6. The committee decided to promulgate the Declaration on the following Monday, July 8, since elections for membership in the new convention were to be held throughout the state on that day and would furnish a better opportunity than usual to secure a large public attendance to hear the reading of this important document.

On July 8, the Declaration of Independence was first proclaimed to the citizens of the United States from the balcony of an observatory attached to the building in the state house yard which occupied the site of what is now the home of the American Phi-the public service commission office!"

John Nixon, formerly an alderman in Philadelphia and commander of a regiment in the Continental army at the battle of Long Island and at Valley Forge. He acted for the sheriff who would by right have read it.

The reading of the Declaration was received with much enthusiasm by the Philadelphians. It is true that the Liberty bell in the state house steeple (that bell whose makers had placed upon it the prophetic inscription "Proclaim Liberty throughout all the Land unto all the inhabitants thereof," when it had been cast some twenty-three years before), was rung at this time-to call the Philadelphians together for the reading of the Declaration and to celebrate the occasion after they had received the news. But the cracking of the bell did not take place at this time. That occurrred exactly 59 years later while it was being tolled for the death of Chief Justice John Marshall, which took place July 8, 1835. Other bells chimed in the cnorus, bonfires were lit that evening and all in all it was one of the most memorable days in the history of the historic City of Brotherly Love.

Although the first official proclamation of the Declaration of Independence took place on July 8, in Independence Square, this was not the first knowledge which the public had of the great news which it contained. For on Saturday, July 6, the Pennsylvania Evening Post, "published every Tuesday and Saturday evenings" at a "price only two coppers" devoted the entire front page of its issue for that date to the publication of the Declaration. On July 8, Dunlap and Claypoole also published it in their weekly, the Pennsylvania Packet, and within the next week or so it had been published in nearly all of the Colonial newspapers, as well as having been proclaimed in various places by the assemblies, councils of safety and the like, for post riders were carrying some of Dunlap and Claypoole's printed copies throughout the newlycreated nation. In Massachusetts where the struggle for liberty had begun, it was first proclaimed on July 14, 1776, and the interesting fact is that it did not take place in Boston. For, according to a contemporary account, "at about noon on Sunday (July 14) a messenger on his way to Boston stopped at one of the taverns on Main street (Worcester) for dinner for himself and team. While waiting for his team to eat and rest he was met by Isaiah Thomas, who obtained from him a copy of the Declaration which he took to the church and read from the porch."

The yoke in the picture is a fair example of the capriciousness of yokes. It started just like any sedate yoke being stitched flat across the front of the frock. However. when it arrives at the shoulders it assumes a dual role in that it glides into a graceful, floating scarf.

The majority of last minute styles elaborate the yoke idea in that they endow it with fautastic interpretations, such as, for instance, the tie yoke which enhances so many necklines. In looking up patterns for summer frocks it behooves the woman who does her own sewing to select

HIS SUSPICIOUS

HE watched him from the little balcony where she had gone to air some blankets. And as she watched him, doubt, distrust and curiosity began to burn like fires with-

Slowly, thoughtfully he moved here and there in her garden with his pocket-knife in his hand. Now he cut a white rose, trimming off the leaves man fashion, now he clipped a bit of heliotrope or a lemon lily or broke off a pansy. He plucked one of her lovely purple irises with too short a stem. Man fashion he bunched the flowers all together, adding a peony, a red rose, two yellow roses and a bit of weigelia. At last he came to her poppies and lingered there considering. Another woman would have smiled at the idea of his adding one of these gleaming garish, vide-petaled things to his odd bouquet, but she did not smile. She was tense by this time with watchfulness.

After some hesitation he clipped off a poppy and put it in the middle of his bunch of flowers. It looked strange, for he eyed it frowningly. He even made some attempts to rearrange it, dropping the smaller flowers from his clums; fingers.

She realized as he stood there in the morning light among her flowers that he was an exceedingly personable man in his gray business suit, crisp panama hat and red tie. He wore red ties because he was dark and pale and as fastidious about a good appearance as a girl would have been. Yes, he was good looking and he had not aged as she had. Men never did age the way women did. At forty-nine she felt quite old at times, but he never appeared that way and she, of course, did not know from anything he said how he felt.

He was a perfectly pleasant husband, a good provider, an uncomplaining guest at table, a quiet uncritical companion at all times. A trifle too reserved and incurious she thought. He asked no questions and tacitly invited none, Sometimes she sighed a bit over him, for there was no secrecy in her soul. She loved to talk about things but it vexed her often that while he listened she was certain his mind was going its own way.

Here was something that she could not get at. Never before had he shown any great interest in her flowers. He allowed her to buy what she chose and plant where she desired, he neither interfered nor admired. He said he could understand books, but flowers were something for the feminine taste to enjoy. Oh, he liked flowers or the table, but this simple service seemed to him to be the utmost they could perform as far as he was concerned.

And now here he was in her garden culling her finest. What did it mean? She pursed her lips and knitted her brows. As he went down the street with the bouquet in his hand little glints gathered in her gray eyes. Now for the first time did she realize that she could be bitterly jealous of her husband.

Sitting down in the balcony she ried to reason with herself, tried to understand the situation. There was a new stenographer in the office, a Miss Perkins, a ruddy-haired, young creature fresh from business school. She was pretty and smart. Men of forty-nine liked gorgeous youthful women, especially when the women were under their very noses day after day. She had always disliked the idea of there being a girl in the office, but Mrs. Polley, who had been so faithful and efficient, had inherited some money unexpectedly and to Joanna distastefully. She had withdrawn and Fenton's partner had engaged Miss Perkins.

The bouquet must be intended for Miss Perkins! She bit her lip. Her husband to carry a bouquet to a girl whose head looked like a flaming haystack! She could not see the humor in a middle-aged man offering such an aggregation of color to young beauty. She merely burned with

Well! She would hunt the thing down and confront him in his foolishness. When she saw the bouquet on Miss Perkins' desk it would tell her all she wished to know. Afterward she could have it out with him,

She went into her room and dressed very carefully. Angry and excited as she was she took pains with herself She put on her handmade blouse and her gray silk skirt and her kindest hat. Then she smiled grimly to Ler reflection in the glass and sailed down-

It was terribly hot and heat did first agree with her and she had to walk a long way before she came to ner husbind's office. She popped into the place so suddenly that Miss Perkins did not took up from her work for half a mindie.

There were flowers on Miss Perkins' desk-dark, long-stemm&d red roses which shed the fragrance of the true Etoile de France. Red roses for a red-haired girl! She had thought that far when Miss Perkins lifted her sves. "Oh! Good morning." said Miss Per kins. "What can I do for you?"

"Nothing," snapped Joanna, "I am Ars. Southwelk." But she could not help wondering why those red roses were on Miss Perkins' desk.

"Oh, yes!" murmured Miss Perkins and she seemed a trifle abushed "Won't you sit down? Mr. Southwell is in his private office with Mr. Jones.

She paused. Joanna had started for Atchison Globe.

She knocked, but nobody answered. She knocked again. Then she flung round with her face flaming.

"Isn't there another door to the office?" she demanded. "Yes, through the little cloak room," admitted astonished Miss Perkins.

Joanna hurried thither. She entered the private office without knocking. It may be said she entered like a cat, stealthily. Then she stood, arrested by what she saw. Her husband and his aged partner had their heads together and between them on the desk was a bouquet of flowers. In his hand Mr. Fenton Southwell held the flamboyant poppy.

"Take a bed of these now-" he was saving. "You can't have anything tastier, do you know it, John?" And he fingered his red necktie.

"I favor this yellow flower," replied Mr. Jones. "It smells so nice. A bed of these at the right hand of the driveway—" He made a descriptive flourish with his hand, At that instant they both looked around startled. The door lock had clicked. It was Joanna fleeing on the current of her mortification. She rushed home sweltering and flung herself down on the davenport all perspiration, and tears of shame. "You are the biggest fool," she told herself. "Doubting a man like Fenton Southwell."

That evening as they sat on the porch Fenton told her about the garden old John was going to have. He said nothing about the bouquet. There was no need.

November Fifth Wild Night in English Town

The entire town in Sussex, England, gives itself up to an extraordinary form of amusement on the fifth of November each year. It is bonfire night, for which preparations have been made months in advance. The zest of the Lewes people for these astonishing displays was intensified during the Marian persecution, when, in 1557, ten martyrs were burned in the High street. From those far-off days, except for a sort period during the war, the demonstrations have continued down to the present time. There are now six important Bonfire societies and many thousands of blazing torches are seen on the occasion of this annual event. On the night of the celebrations each society's procession forms at the War memorial, the members being arrayed in fancy clothes, many wearing the dress of the early Seventeenth century. Torches are carried and each procession bears its "victim" aloft in the form of an effigy. In earlier times the effigies were models of unpopular citizens, but today they are merely grotesque figures. Brass bands and "squealing fifes" provide music of all kinds, and the processions file off to their particular bonfire "grounds" or fields outside the town.-Louisville Courier-Journal.

Called for Fast Footwork

One of the early troubles of the powder industry was a habit the workmen had of fighting what were known as "keg duels." The rules were simple. The two men who had quarreled each took a keg of g powder and went into the woods with their seconds. About a rod of slowburning fuse was attached to each keg of powder. The two duelists then seated themselves on the kegs and the seconds, each standing at the far ends of their respective fuses, waited the word to apply the spark to the fuse. After that was done there was nothing to do but to await developments. Everyone knows that powder, unlike dynamite, explodes upward. If one keg of powder went up first and the other man could get away before his keg unlimbered itself it was his privilege to do so. But he had to move fast .- Detroit News.

First Marriage in Canada

According to "First Things in Canada," complied by the late George Johnson, for many years Dominion statistician, the first marriage in Canada was that of Etienne Couillard and Anne Hebert, which took place in Quebec in 1617. The bride was the daughter of Louis Hebert, Canada's first farmer. He came from France and first settled in Acadia, now Nova Scotia. He was the first to utilize the salt water marshes at the head of the Bay of Fundy by building dykes to keep out the tide. In 1617, the year of his daughter's marriage, he removed to Quebec, took up land adjacent to the city, and began cultivating it.-Montreal Herald.

KELLYS do not cost more

There are several good makes of tires on the market, but some are better than others. Among these better tires Kelly-Springfields hold an undisputed high place.

Kellys have always been built to give service. That is what has given them their reputation. This reputation has created an impression that Kellys cost more than the socalled "standard makes." As a matter of fact, they don't. You can buy a Kelly for the same price you would pay elsewhere for a tire with a lesser reputation.

Give us a call the next time you need a tire; you won't regret it. The Kellys of today are the toughest, longestwearing and easiest-riding tires that ever came out of the Kelly plant-and the prices are the lowest in Kelly history.

Heads Chautaugua Play Company

OLIVE KACKLEY

A prime favorite with her audience is Olive Kackley, the Dramatic Director of the Chautauqua System, who heads the popular Kackley Players on the fifth day of Chautau-qua in the presentation of two recent Broadway successes. So insistent has been the demand of Chautauqua patrons to see more of Miss Kackley as an actress in her own company, that this popular group will present this year two plays instead of one: in the afternoon, Thompson Buchanan's three act comedy, "Civilian Clothes," the comedy hit of a New York Theatrical season, and in the evening, William Hodge's great play, "For All Of Us." Incidentally, this is the first William Hodge play ever presented on Chautauqua and it is acclaimed by New York critics as the best of the many good plays written by the William Hodge play ever presented on Chautauqua and it is acclaimed by New York critics as the best of the many good plays written by that author-actor.

Famous Composer to Appear Here

CLAY SMITH

Clay Smith, whose photograph appears above, for more than thirty years has been building a reputation as one of America's greatest and best loved composers. In 1915 he organized the Smith-Spring-Holmes Orchestral Quintet and since that time this group under his direction, has established an enviable record as one of the foremost concert groups of America. His name and his mus-Phonograph records by the company as well as solo recordings by individual members of the group have helped to stablish the Smith-Spring-Holmes Company in the esteem of the American public. In the quintet Mr. Smith plays trombone, saxophone and basset horn.

Associated with him is Guy E.

Holmes, saxophonist, flutist and cornetist whose compositions are almost as well known as those of Mr. Smith. The work of these two composers in saxophone duets and in cornet and trombone duets is a feature of the quintet's concerts. Every music lov-er should hear these famous compos-ers and their assisting artists on the fourth day of the Chautauqua.

But where the Pharaohs raised their monuments to stand for all time. he life of the modern monument to commerce is fixed at 25 years. Children who watch these lofty towers reaching toward the sky today in New York, Chicago and a score of other cities will, as middle-aged adults, see them leveled again.

The explanation is that the average skyscraper is being built comparatively as cheaply as a subdivision bungalow because the builder cannot afford to take chances on the course of rapidly changing land values as the American city changes its course of growth, points out Silas Bent in World's Work. They cannot risk sinking a fortune in a giant office structure only to find that within 10 or 15 years the district has changed soon to be erected in Chicago will mark the ultimate in lofty construction, or whether it will be surpassed by a 110-story tower projected in New York and by others still higher, is a problem interestingly discussed by

While theoretically there is no limto which builders may not aspire today, there is a rigid economic limit at which such buildings cease to be profitable, he shows. And the limit is due to one of the chief factors that made the skyscraper possible-the elevator.

"The taller the building, the greater must be the number of elevators to accommodate the tenants," he points out in the World's Work article. Now where ground rentals are enormous the space given over to elevators becomes an item of moment. In cities of a million population it is calculated that the 20 story building is about as lofty as is consistent with economic construction. Only where land values are abnormal, or where there is exceptional advertising value in mere height, are more stories justified."

A building so high that it must give a third or half of its ground space over to elevator shafts would necessarily be far more costly than one only two-thirds as high, and not as profitable, he shows. So that un

GENTLE BULL IS EVER DANGEROUS

Animals With Bad Reputations Closely Watched.

"All bulls must be regarded as dangerous," says H. A. Hopper of the New York State College of Agriculture. "It is the gentle bull, not the vicious one, that most certainly kills or maims his victim. Those with bad reputations are more closely watched."

Since improvement in dairy herds comes slowly, promising bulls should be kept in service long enough to determine the worth of their daughters. With proper care, bulls may give satisfactory service until fourteen or sixteen years old.

The chief reasons for frequent changes of bulls as indicated by owners, are: Sold for beef, changed to another breed, his calves were mostly bulls, his daughters lacked type and were poorly marked, sold for beef to avoid inbreeding, lacked arrangements for exercise and safety, he was often neglected, became useless as a breeder and was killed, he killed his keeper.

The first four reasons are, in part valid; under certain circumstances they might justify the disposal of a bull, Professor Hopper says. The last four causes turn upon inadequate facilities for housing, for controlling, and for maintaining the health of the bull and a more serious cause.

Professor Hopper is the author of a bulletin just issued by the New York State College of Agriculture on "The Housing and Handling of Bulls," E 177. In it he says that bulls respond to care and training. The author describes the bull stall, the safety bull pen, handling the bull, trimming the feet, ringing, and dehorning. The publication will be sent free upon request made to the office of publication, Roberts Hall, Ithaca, N. Y.

Excellent Plan to Keep Calf Little Bit Hungry

A calf fed three times daily can assimilate more food than when it is fed after it has finished drinking its milk. Milk fed to young calves should be at about body temperature. Cool milk should be warmed to a temperature of 95 degrees Fahrenheit by setting the pail in a vessel of bot water before being fed. One cannot depend upon guesswork-be sure to use a thermometer! Cold milk will almost always cause digestive troubles, resulting in scours which tend to stop the calf's growth and hinder its getting a good

No one can accurately estimate with the eye the quantity of milk in a pail. Milk scales are very convenient for Clean feeding pails are absolutely essential to successful calf raising. They should be washed after each feeding as carefully as milk utensils and sterilized if possible. Dirty pails invariably cause digestive troubles. All mangers and feed boxes should be kept scrupulously clean. Plenty of bedding, straw, corn stover or shavings should be used, especially in the winter, to insure the calves always being on dry litter and not on the cold stall floor.

Contamination of Water Will Lead to Disorders

The water supply of dairy farms should be carefully examined and its purity established. The farmer owes this protection to his own family, to his business interests, and to those who use milk that comes from his dairy. Contamination of water may lead to typhoid fever. All water on the farm, even that to which only the cattle have access, should be above suspicion as to its purity. If cows wade in polluted water, disease bacteria may adhere to their bodies and later fall into the milk pails. Especial attention should be paid to the purity of the water in which milk pails and other utensils are washed.

Dairy Stable Equipment Makes Much Difference

The equipment of a dairy barn makes a great deal of difference in the labor of caring for the cows. Good concrete floors with gutters and drainage makes it possible to keep the cows clean and minimizes the labor of caring for the stable. Swinging stanchions which allow the cows considerable freedom have met with approval. When cows are confined by stanchions they require less space, less bedding and may be handled with less labor than by either leaving the cows loose or in box stalls. Dirt floors are not good in a dairy stable as they cannot be kept clean,

Cows for Cream

The number of cows that can profitably be kept for cream production on any farm is dependent upon the quantity of pasture, roughage and labor available. However, on most farms this number should range from five to ten head. The income from these cows will usually take care of the operating expense of the average farm and make it possible for the farmer to bank the returns from his cash crops rather than pay old debts with

Women Willing to Work

Hundreds of applicants for positions as stewardesses, conductresses, nurses, manicurists, hairdressers and shop attendants on shipboard present themselves to shipping companies weekly.

Many of them are women of good birth and education, and with a love of travel, but who cannot afford world tours and are willing to work their way in order to get them.

Shipping officials point out, however, and exacting that there is no chance for the woman who takes them as a means of cheap travel getting to see much of the world while she is working in a liner.

THE STORY

Hilton Hanby has purchased a country place—the Gray house, near Pine Plains, Miss Selenos, a former tenant, warns him that the house is under a curse. Further alarming details are im-pressed upon Adolf Smucker Hanby's secretary, by a man who claims to have been chauffeur for Sir Stanford Seymour, former occupant of the place. The Handral Seymour in the place of the place. bys laugh off the warnings. But they are shocked when they hear that the caretaker of the Gray house, a man named Kerr, has been mysteriously murdered Hanby consults his friend Pel-ham. The family starts for the new home. Appleton, a clerk of Douglas and Smith, the agents from whom Hanby bought the Gray house, urges Pelham to dis-Gray house, diges remain to dis-suade Hanby from occupying the Gray house. Hanby considers ask-ing Leslie Barron, long an ad-mirer of Celia, to join the house party. Mrs. Hanby declares she likes the house. Pelham becomes a member of the household Leslie Barron arrives making four able-bodied members of the Hanby household. A phone call from a man who declares he is an old acquaintance of Hanby's and interested in ornithology, but whom Hanby cannot identify, urges him to preserve a part of the grounds as a bird sanctuary. The idea appeals to Hanby and he makes the promise. The Hanbys take possession of the Gray house. A stranger introducing himself as Frederick Appleton, calls at the Gray house and is welcomed because of his interest in bird life.

CHAPTER VI-Continued -10-

After luncheon Hanby admitted that the workmen were not accomplishing what the contractor had promised.

"Since you bring up the subject," said Mr. Appleton, "may I point out the probable causes?"

He spoke with much assurance on work and workmen, on the cost of material, and on the manner in which grafting foremen could deceive even the intelligent but amateur scrutiny of a man like Mr. Hanby. .

"I wish you were out of a positlon," Mr. Hanby said, when Apple ton finished.

"May I ask why?" "I'd ask you to be my agent here. Besides these Improvements, I have three tenant farmers who want repairs for barns and houses, and I'm bound to say they seem most unreasonable. I came here to play, not Appleton smiled. He had the look of one who delights to bring good "Things generally turn out for the best," he observed. "I left the employ of Douglas & Smith last week. Strictly speaking, I could not afford to do so; but, after almost thirtyfive years, to have to take orders from one with not one-third of that service was too bitter. I am not a proud man, Mr. Hanby, but I resigned. This is a business trip. Mr Clarke, of Amenia, is considering alterations, and I hoped he might select me to supervise them."

"It's Clarke's loss," said Hanby I need you more than he does." Mrs. Hanby was very glad at the suitable turns up? This is an enormous house, as you know." Appleton was made specially welcome because his coming exempted each member of the household from some unaccustomed and unwelcome task. Junior had been deputed to see that the workmen finished the swimming pool on time. Celia's arithmetic was strained at estimating the cost of lumber. These labors Mr Appleton took over. The Hanbys liked him for his simplicity. He told them about his wife whom he adored-an invalid lady unable to leave New York because of some special treatment for rheumatism that she was taking.

The foreman of masons resigned directly he found a man over him whom he could not fool. Appleton's mild appearance deceived him. It was one of his grounds of grievance when he sought an interview with Mr. Hanby.

"You say Mr. Appleton swore at you 'something terrible'?" Hanby scoffed. "Don't lie about it! Mr. Appleton couldn't do a thing like that. but I'm liable to turn rough any time an inefficient loafer tries to put up a fool story like that. Get out!" "Had the audacity," Hanby told his wife, "to say that old Appleton called him foul names." They laughed together at the absurdity of it.

"I lost my temper, I admit," con fessed' Appleton, at lunch. "I explained that labor owed something to the capital without which it could not exist."

"You talked over his head," Hanby said. "I thought that must be it." The old man bothered them very little. He did not intrude. It was his nightly habit to walk about the grounds, puffing at the single cigar he allowed himself, and then to retire. He insisted on making his own bed and keeping his room in order. The servants, after the untidy ways of Junior and Les, found him no trouble at all. "He saves me twice his salary every week," Hanby declared, "and he allows me to be a gentleman of leisure again."

"Appleton is all right," said Junior thinking of the overseer's job that had been his. "We all love him except Les."

"What have you against him?" Bill Pelham demanded, "Report all suspicious things to the house detective." Les did not welcome the looks that were cast upon him.

"Nothing," he admitted. "I can't like every one, can I?"

"Les," demanded Celia, "tell me at once-what is it?" "He reminds me of my Uncle Russell, if you must know. He has the same highly polished face. I don't like my uncle, and it's the associa tion of ideas, I suppose." "Les," ('elia said severely, "I don't believe that's the real reason.'

There was no doubt about Leslie's smile. He was a singularly good looking lad when he smiled with small, white, even teeth, and a mouth cut almost too well for a man. "That's all you are going to get from me," he said. "Leave it to the house detective." Pelham interrupted. "I'll give Les the third degree and report to you tomorrow."

"Les is full of prejudices," Celia answered. "Don't worry, Bill He has a young and uninteresting soul. I like men of your age." She turned to her mother. "I confessed to Bill my hopeless passion for him at Al lenhurst, but be wasn't even flat

"Darling Bill," said Celia seductive ly, "I love you, and I shall have a ding day. Will you marry me just to spite Les?"

"If he'll be my best man. Will you, Les?"

"I'll be d-d first!" cried Les hotly "You see he's really fond of me," Celia announced, "Look at the fire in his eyes and the passion in his voice. If ever I marry him, he'll which he appeared. "Afraid you were not coming' Hanby said cordially.

"You certainly make them work," said Hanby. "I wonder how you

The black snake is a rat eater, a mouse hunter, worth his weight in gold to your honored parents in the protection of the song birds. Rats are the natural enemies of the birds. The black snakes are the natural enemies of rats." Instinct guided Mr. Appleton's eyes to Tim, who was at that moment meditating a snake hunt. "Tim will be wise not to kill any but renomous snakes, such as the copperhead.".

"Tim is not going near the bird sanctuary," his mother declared. After luncheon Appleton sought out Mr. Hanby.

"By the end of the week I shall have completed all the alterations. he said. "I have seen to the farm repairs, and have reduced your account keeping to a card index system well within the comprehension of your

"That doesn't mean you are leaving us, I hope?"

take your place." "That should not be necessary." said Mr. Appleton. "Oh, dear me no! You will have no more trouble with workmen."

"I'll see Douglas about it," said Hanby. "I'm going into town in a few days."

"I doubt if Mr. Douglas knows of any one. Everything in that line was left to me. In his desire to be courteous to you he might recommend some wholly unsuitable person."

Hanby sensed the dislike the former employee felt for the man who had failed to appreciate him, but this did not sway the new owner in the least. Nor did Appleton's offer to send a man meet with approval Douglas was one of the biggest men of his calling in New York, and Hanby maintained that he would not recommend any but an expert.

When Appleton had gone, Bill Pelham asked Leslie a question. "What was your grievance against man ever gets over," Les replied "Hist!" warned Bill. "Who comes?"

A stranger stepped out of a station taxi, walked over the terrace, and rang the bell. "Who's that?" Les demanded.

"Except that she is a professional woman forty-three years of age, height five feet five, weight one hundred and fifty, has two gold stoppings in the lower bicuspids, has never been married, is fond of hiking, and devoted to classical music, I can tell you nothing. But for those details

"Bill, you're a marvel," said Les. "I dare not contradict you. I am. It all comes out of a correspondence course on how to be a house detective." "How can I check up on the teeth?" Les asked.

"You can't. That wouldn't be playing the game. It would be rude of you to ask the lady to open her mouth. Take my word for it."

Grass Grown in India to Make Match Sticks of match sticks is becoming scarce in this country lends special interest to a report from British India to the effect that a grass is being successfully employed there for such purposes.

At Sholapur there is a factory that is making match sticks from a growth called Surya grass, abundant in some parts of India. The grass is cut into two-inch lengths, winnowed and screened to obtain uniform size, and then boiled in a revolving drum. Twenty-four pounds of Burma paraffin is sufficient for 7,000 boxes of matches.

Shaken through a horizontal sifter, the sticks are deposited in horizontal layers, which are secured in a frame for the dipping of the ends, and dipped in a solution of chlorate of potash, sulphate of arsenic, potash of bichloride, powdered gypsum and gum arabic. Six pounds of this mixture provide for the 7,000 boxes of matches. By islands.

PROPER TIME TO PRUNE RASPBERRY

Soon as Harvest Is Over Re-- move All Old Canes.

Now that the harvest of raspberries (red and black) is over, the proper time is here to remove the old canes, the ones which fruited this season. This should be done as soon as possible after fruiting is over, so as to allow all the sap and food which is necessary to keep them alive to go into the young canes that came up from the base of the plant this spring, writes B. W. Keith in Rural New Yorker. These old fruiting canes will die anyway before many weeks, so why leave them to "sap" the plant? They also harbor diseases and insects and if they are cut out, taken from the field and burned, it will help that much toward having healthy canes for next year's crop.

Berry pruners of any kind can be used in cutting out these old canes. just so they are cut off close to the stump of the plant. In commercial fields, where there are a great many old canes to remove, it becomes quite a back-breaking job to do all the cutting with common hand pruners, and it also becomes quite a "prickly" job, unless leather gloves are used. To escape the back-breaking and pricking business, some wise farmer devised a combined pruner and "pincher" whereby he could cut off the canes and at the same time pinch onto them, pull them out of the row and place then in piles so they could be easily handled with a common pitchfork.

This combined affair is made by making a pair of "pincers" similar to those used by blacksmith, forge tongs for instance. On the under side of one of the jaws of the "pincers" is riveted sharp blade made from a file or omething similar, and should be attached so as to shear past the other jaw about three-fourths of an inch when the "pincers" are closed. The handies should be made so they could be driven into a three-foot wooden handle of some kind, which would enable the farmer to use the implement without stooping over. He can stand upright and catch hold of a respberry cane at the base with the "pincers" and, as the sharp blade cuts the cane off, the jaws of the pincers hold fast to it just above the cut and the canes can be removed. Throw the old canes in piles between the rows, throwing the canes from the two rows into one row of piles and, before the leaves have time to dry up so they will drop off and remain in the field, remove the canes to some convenient spot and burn. It is best to burn them before they dry much to catch the insects and dis-

Peach Aphid Does Not

Spread Tobacco Mosaic After being accused of spreading topacco mosaic disease, the peach aphid, a common type of yellowish-green plant louse, has been given a verdict of "Not Guilty."

This little insect has been regarded by certain investigators as capable of transmitting the virus of tobacco mosaic from infected to healthy tobacco plants. But after careful investigation, Isme Hoggan and James Johnson of the agricultural staff of the University of Wisconsin have freed the accused of any responsibility in the matter. "And as a result of these studies, certain important conclusions have been reached in respect to the spread of virus diseases of insects. While the peach aphid can no longer be convicted of spreading the serious disease known as tobacco mosaic, this insect is regarded as capable of transmitting eucumber mosaic in tobacco, a relatively unimportant disease from a commercial standpoint. Whether other species of insects are guilty or not remains to be demonstrated.

soils that are slow or that delay the ripening of the fruit, it is an inferior product. Climate complicates the matter still further so that there are relatively few places in the country where Northern Spy is at its best. Rather than trying to guess whether or not Northern Spy will do well with you, you had better inquire from your neighbor. If you find old trees producing the kind of fruit that you want, the information will be worth more to you than any amount of theorizing.

Humus Is Important Humus is an important consideration with black raspberries. They need plenty of moisture and this is difficult to keep in a very heavy clay soil. A clay soil will, however, grow fine crops of nice berries if it has been supplied with humus through turning under green crops or the application of barnyard manure. The red raspberry will do well in a rather wide range of soils, but the most success with them has been on a rich light clay loam.

Putting All Your Eggs in One Basket

The man who decides not to take life insurance because he has a good business and thinks he can save enough for his family out of the profits, should remember that putting all his eggs in Many factors entirely out of his control could cause his business to fail. The same factors are not likely to influence the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company. One of its contracts is a sure guarantee of protection for his family.
