CATHOLIC BOYS BAND HERE FROM DETROIT

The First Annual Tawas Bay Water Carnival opened Thursday with 10,000 people in the two cities to witness the events and enjoy themselves along the shore of the bay. Hundreds of them were former Isosco county people from Detroit, Flint, Bay City, Saginaw and other places. In the early morning clouds threatened to dampen the day, but soon disappeared and by noon the streets were thronged with people. A heavy wind prevailed until evening, however, whipping up a choppy sea which curtailed the boat races for the day to one event.

One of the interesting events of the day was the Boy Scout parade, with the famous Catholic Boys Band of Detroit. This band had just returned from Washington, D. C., where they played before President Hoover, who was very much pleased with the boys. The organization is under the leadership of Joseph W. Guinan, a musician of national reputation. Their inspiring program here Thursday was greeted with delight by the huge crowd. They play here Friday and Saturday. This band was brought from Detroit through the efforts of the Tawas Yacht Club.

A program of music and singing by the West Branch band is one of the attractions of the three day carnival. West Branch has a band of which it can be very proud.

The baseball game between Tawas City and the 17th Squadron, Selfridge Field Fliers, resulted in favor of the Fliers, 10 to 4. The contest between East Tawas and the Saginaw Athletic Club went 13 innings before East Tawas conquered the Saginawians, 5 to 4.

On the 5th the Tawas team, made up of players from both towns, triumphed over the Baker Perkins team of Saginaw by a score of 1 to 0.

The following were the winners in the athletic events Thursday:

BOY SCOUTS ENJOY FOUR DAYS CAMPING

Seventeen Boy Scouts enjoyed four days' camping at Pike farm last week. The walks to Sand Lake and the swims thereafter were good. The watermelon sent out by a friend was well taken care of. The boys had such a good time, they plan to have another outing in July.

At the Court of Honor held at East Tawas, Earl Davis and Harold Moeller passed their second class tests and were awarded their pins.

LOCAL MAN NARROWLY ESCAPES DEATH IN RACE AT SAGINAW

Charles Trudell, of this city, one of the youngest drivers in the outboard motor races held at Saginaw July 1, missed being killed or seriously injured by inches at the start of the second heat for Class B boats when his Little Secret, a model of the racing yacht his father built years ago to make speed boat history, was run over amidships by Al Zaul of Saginaw, piloting a Boyd Martin. Trudell was struck in the stomach by the Saginaw boat and fainted, but was revived after his disabled boat had been towed ashore.

A large boat owned and operated by Joseph Gougeon caused the accident. The racing craft was roaring.

GROESBECK-FRASER

On Saturday, June 29, at six o'clock, at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. John L. Fraser, occurred the marriage of Mina B. Fraser to Edward C. Groesbeck.

The bride wore a beautiful gown of white georgette and lace and carried a bouquet of roses and swansonia. She was attended by her sister, Miss Lois F. Fraser, who was attired in orchid georgette and carried a bouquet of pink roses and swansonia. The groom was attended by his brother, Byron Groesbeck.

After the ceremony which was read by Rev. J. W. LeVan of the Methodist church of East Tawas, the company partook of a delicious dinner served by three young ladies of Miss Fraser's classes—Misses Fay Adams, Regina Barkman and Jennie Burgeson. The rooms were decorated in pink and white peonies, ferns and thalictrum. The table decorations also carried out the bride's color scheme of pink and white with roses and tapers.

Among the guests were Mr. and Mrs. Byron Groesbeck and son, Bonnie, of Lansing, Malcolm McLeod of Tawas, Mr. and Mrs. Leslie Fraser of Flint, Henry Durant of Grant, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Miller, Miss Floren Miller and Mrs. LeVan of East Tawas, Miss Amanda J. Hamilton and Miss Winnifred Babcock of Detroit.

The bride has been principal of the Junior school of East Tawas for several years. Her popularity was attested to by the numerous showers and individual gifts of beautiful silver, linen and other articles appropriate for brides. The groom is from Denver, Colorado, although at present a student in Michigan State College, and an employee of the federal forestry department.

The best wishes and felicitations of the communities where Mr. and Mrs. Groesbeck are so well known are extended to them for the future.

CELEBRATE SILVER WEDDING ANNIVERSARY AT KOKOSING RESORT

Kokosing Resort, Long Lake, was the scene of a beautiful celebration last Sunday. This day marked the silver anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. C. A. List, the genial hosts of the resort. Special religious services were held in the spacious lobby of the hotel, followed by a dinner served to a large number of relatives and friends, who had come to extend best wishes to the estimable couple. In the setting of beautiful Kokosing the day proved highly enjoyable to all in attendance.

Mr. and Mrs. List have but recently taken over the management of Kokosing Resort and certainly have a host of well wishers for their success.

TAWAS CITY VICTORIOUS OVER GLENNE NINE

The local baseball squad journeyed to Glennie last Sunday, where they administered a defeat to the Alcona county boys by a score of 8 to 3.

The game was well played, few errors being made by either team. Tawas City making three and Glennie four. In number of hits made the two teams were also very well matched. The Tawas City runs, however, were acquired due to the fact that their hits were bunched, aided by a number of sacrifice hits.

Ferris Brown, local southpaw hurler, held the Alcona county boys in fine shape with his baffling tactics. Although his first game with the local independent team, he went the entire nine innings, allowing Glennie but seven well scattered hits. He also retired seven men by the strike-out route. His two opponents on the mound also proved quite effective, although the local boys collected eight safeties off them.

Sunday, July 7, Tawas City and East Tawas will clash at the local Athletic Field. This promises to be an interesting and exciting game and will be worth while seeing. Don't miss it.

WOMEN SHOW INTEREST IN ECONOMICS COURSE

Isosco county women are showing an increasing interest in the organization of local groups for the study of nutrition during the coming year, under the direction of the home economics extension department, M. S. C.

Miss Muriel Dundas, nutrition specialist, has recently met groups in the county to explain and help organize groups for the project, which will begin in September. Local groups will meet monthly, for a four month period, following training meetings held at central places in the county.

Any group of women may elect a chairman, secretary, and two project leaders, who will then attend the training meetings and later hold local meetings to pass on the information given by the specialist. Groups should contain at least eight members and may have 20.

For further information concerning the project, write Miss Dundas at the Log Office, Bay City, or call Mrs. Will Waters, Whittemore, Mrs. Frank Dease, Tawas City, or Mrs. Harry Price, East Tawas. Any person who wishes, may enroll for the course. There is no charge for the service.

An invitation is extended to those who wish to know more about the organization of local groups, to attend the meeting at the Vine school at 2 o'clock, Friday, July 19. To insure the success of the project at least ten groups should be organized and more than that number might be enrolled.

EAST TAWAS POOLROOM PADLOCKED FOR YEAR

The poolroom at East Tawas operated by Henry O. Biskner was padlocked for one year by order of Judge Arthur J. Tuttle Monday morning in Federal court. Biskner was convicted of violation of the prohibition law and fined $1000.00.

The owner of the building was A. J. Berube, who contended on the witness stand that he knew nothing of the law violations which were carried on in the place.

Biskner filed bankruptcy proceedings in the clerk's office Monday listing among his liabilities the amount of the fine which he paid. His total liabilities were listed as $3,376.98, as against assets of $2,162.98.

PROTECT BEAL NURSERY FROM SERIOUS WHITE PINE BLISTER RUST DISEASE

A crew of seven men from the state Department of Agriculture is now at work protecting the white pines in the Beal Nursery at East Tawas from the fatal white pine blister rust. The Beal Nursery is one of the greatest forest tree nurseries in the state. It furnishes planting stock for the National Forests of Michigan. It enjoys a nationwide reputation for efficient quantity and quality production of planting stock.

No blister rust has ever been found within the Nursery. Last year however, the rust was found at Tawas City on the leaves of currant and gooseberry bushes. These bushes are the alternate host plants of the rust. The white pine blister rust but must come from a nearby tree but must come from a nearby currant or gooseberry bush after passing through a period of developing on the leaves of the bushes. The spores (tiny seed bodies) are carried to the pines by the wind.

In order to insure the planting stock in the Beal Nursery from damage by the rust, it is necessary to destroy all currant and gooseberry plants (both wild and cultivated) within a radius of 1500 feet of the Nursery limits. In addition, because of their extreme susceptibility, it is necessary to destroy all cultivated black currants within a radius of one mile.

It is very important that all planting stock should be free from the disease as the stock is planted over a wide area. If infected, the seedlings and transplants would spread the blister rust throughout the National Forests of the state.

The Department of Agriculture and the Beal Nursery earnestly solicits the co-operation of the people of this community in helping to destroy this destructible disease of white pine trees.

It is hoped that control work here will be completed by the first of next week. The control crew will then move to the State Forest Nursery at Higgins Lake where the planting stock for the state forests is grown.

Little Journeys in Americana

By LESTER B. COLBY

Legend of Ampato Sapa

AMPATO SAPA was an Indian maiden. The legend as I find it does not name the others who figured in her romance and her tragedy. The legend, as it has been handed down through generations, finds the name of Ampato sufficient.

In her early years Ampato was not wholly like other girls. She was more beautiful. The Sioux as a tribe are rather stolid. They are not towering in stature and are heavy set as a rule. The women are sturdy and stout burden-bearers. Ampato was not like that.

The legend says that she grew up to be tall and lithe and winsome. Her raven hair was very long and she wore it in thick braids. She danced with the light grace of the antelope in flight and her step was as soft and sure as that of the panther.

Ampato Sapa did her full share of the day's labor but she ended her toil at night time with a smile and a song on her lips. The village loved Ampato. The legend, as it comes to me, does not tell the name of Ampato's father or her mother or of any of the braves who wooed her. Perhaps it is better so. Nor does it tell the name of him who became her husband.

No, the legend is about Ampato and St. Anthony's falls.

These falls are on the Mississippi river in Minnesota. The Indians, when Father Hennepin found the falls, called them "Rara." The word is from Irara, which means "to laugh." Therefore, the name of the Falls of St. Anthony, in the language of the red men, meant laughter.

But the red men say that the laughing waters also weep, each day at sunrise, for Ampato. The story of Ampato was an old story when Hennepin, Franciscan monk of the Re-collect order, came upon those falls one October day in 1688—the first white man ever to set eyes upon them.

Hennepin, in his story of their grandeur, estimated that they made a sheer drop of sixty feet. But he told his story too well. A few years later, others who followed him said the waters here fell thirty feet. In time scientific parties came and measured the falls. The drop? Oh, twelve feet.

But a world of water goes over them and the roar is deafening at times. The stream comes as a living torrent. In full flood, it is mighty and impressive.

Well, Ampato Sapa as she grew to womanhood, unfolded like a flower. Her bosoms rounded and it was noted among the Sioux that their fairest daughter had ripened. And any brave that might be her heart's desire she could have for the choice. You see, in this she was not like other girls among the Sioux.

Feats of strength went round. The young men rode ponies in the contests. They painted their faces and bodies in many colors and danced in their finery. I wonder why the legend does not tell the name of the man she chose or by what arts he captured her.

Perhaps he is nameless as a punishment for his sins. Anyway, the legend merely records that he was stronger, swifter, a better hunter and a surer rider than the rest of them. Thus he came to her tent and there stayed and was her's.

It was a happy union. Two babies came to bless them. There was joy in their teepee. Soon other families attached themselves to Ampato's husband. His teepee was the center of a group—which meant that he was recognized as a chief.

Maybe the attentions turned his head. He became ambitious. He desired power. And among the Sioux a chief, if bold, might take on more than one wife. Plurality of wives, in a way, was a distinction. Ampato's husband came home one day with a second wife.

Ampato was sad. She wept. Her husband then, to dry away her tears, told her that this other wife should always be her servant. She should do the heavy work. Ampato would always be his beloved. But Ampato wept on. And the next morning she was gone. Gone, too, were her two children. She had taken them with her.

That winter Ampato spent at a distant village in the wigwam of her father. One early morning in the springtime, when the blood-roots and adder-tongues bloomed in the shadows and the marsh-marigold was aglow in the swamps, Ampato paddled out into the tumbling waters of the Mississippi river—above the falls.

While her village looked on she took her two babies to her bosom and began her death chant. The frail canoe was caught in the torrent. Over the Falls of St. Anthony it plunged—and that was all. She had sacrificed herself and her infants because of the inconstancy of her husband.

And that is why, the ancient legend says, the waters of the Falls of St. Anthony, known as Rara, the laughing waters, cease laughing every day at daybreak and for a time become sobs. So if you ever stand by these falls at dawn and hear the laughter of the waters turn to weeping you will know why. They are sobbing for Ampato, the beautiful girl of the Sioux.

Around Orchard

SPRAYING PLANTS MADE STATIONARY

High-Power Pump Pushes Liquid Through Pipes.

One of the present-day tendencies in spray equipment is the introduction of stationary spraying plants. From a central point at the source of water supply, pipes are run to all parts of the orchard. Hose may be connected to outlets spaced at intervals through the whole piped area. A high-power pumping outfit pushes the spray material through the pipes. It is necessary to have this high pressure at the plant because the friction of the small pipes rapidly reduces the pressure if the distance to the outlet is great.

The original investment in this type of spraying equipment is high. To be economical, it is essential that the orchard area be compact. If it is not compact, the piping cost becomes prohibitive.

A few growers in the Middle West are now putting in this type of spray equipment. They are very common in the far West, where the acreages are compact and usually not more than 40 acres in one unit.

There are several objections to this type of equipment in some sections. In Illinois many fruit farms are very large. This would require either several central plants or else one very large one with a great expense for piping due to the large size pipe that it would be necessary to use.

The water would have to come from ponds in most cases in Illinois. If the water in the pond which supplied the central plant gave out, the grower would face a very difficult problem indeed.

Naturally the large original investment would hinder its adoption by many growers, who might otherwise consider it applicable to their conditions.

From the way this system has been adopted in the Far West, there seems little doubt that it may be used in Illinois extensively before many years. At least it is a development which growers can afford to watch.

Several Insects Check Pests of Peach Trees

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

There are several insects that assist materially in checking multiplication of peach insects, says the bureau of entomology of the United States Department of Agriculture. Ladybird beetles are perhaps the most beneficial of these. They prey upon scale insects, aphids, and thrips. The twice-stabbed ladybird beetle is usually prevalent on peach trees that are heavily infested with the San Jose scale. It is jet black in color and has two orange or red spots on the back. Ladybird beetles take their nourishment by sucking scale insects dry. They also assist materially in checking infestations of the rusty-brown plum aphid or other aphids. The adult and young ladybird beetles are sometimes erroneously thought to be the parent of aphids on account of their close relation with these pests. Peach growers should encourage the multiplication of twice-stabbed and other ladybird beetles.

Syrphus flies, lacewing flies, tachina flies, ground beetles, and some of the assassin bugs and preying mantids are other insects that are beneficial to the peach grower. Predacious and parasitic insects give considerable aid in controlling peach insects, and without the help of these beneficial insects it would be very difficult to grow a crop of peaches, even though artificial control measures were enforced.

Horticultural Hints

Trees respond to cultivation just as corn and potatoes do.

Unsatisfactory results are more often due to poor spraying than to other factors.

Black raspberries perhaps stand next to strawberries in desirability and in adaptability.

The importance of thinning fruit in orchards in which the trees are overloaded cannot be overemphasized.

Thinning reduces the amount of breakage in an overloaded fruit tree and cuts down the expenses of propping.

The strawberry is adapted to a wide variety of soils, and is comparatively free from injurious insect pests and plant diseases. The plants rarely require spraying.

Fruit growers of experience who have studied their problems are getting beyond the fixed spray schedule. They have found that the spraying program may often give the best results if planned for particular varieties.

Deep plowing in an orchard is not advisable, especially in older orchards, because of the danger of injury to the roots. Any method that will break the crust and form a dust mulch is satisfactory. This mulch is necessary for the conservation of moisture.

Yaquis Yield Independence

Mexico City.—Mexico's fiercest warriors, the Yaquis, have at last agreed to be commanded by non-Yaqui leaders. For 400 years—300 under Spanish rule, 100 under Mexican—the Yaquis maintained their independence, refusing to be conquered. Led at the end by the government, with their country in ruins, they now go one step further in becoming Mexicanized by their acceptance of a "oreign" commander. Four hundred Yaqui soldiers are at Port Perote, a mountain near Orizaba in the state of Vera Cruz. This is the group which for the first time in his history has submitted to "avi" a non-Indian leader. The war office's announcement of a change in the organization of this Yaqui force was regarded as signifying the disappearance of Yaquis as separate units. Hereafter they will be part of the army. Colonel Enrique Morfin Figueroa has been assigned to the group under the new arrangement.

The actual conqueror of the Yaquis was Gen. Francisco Manzo, one of the leaders of the present rebellion who recently crossed the United States border at Nogales to escape falling into federal hands. The Manzo campaign against the Yaquis, undertaken three years ago, was organized with 13,000 troops and equipment which included nine airplanes.

At that time the Yaquis controlled a region extending 100 miles north of Guaymas, in Sonora, and which included some of the best lands in the republic. The stretch under Yaqui ownership extended along the Yaqui river valley in a district larger than the Imperial valley of California and with water resources three times as great as those of the Imperial valley.

Today the only Yaqui country left in Yaqui power is in the Bacatete mountains. But the power is small. All the warriors are gone or killed. Women and children and old men predominate in the last citadel.

As in the present revolution, the rebel Indians in Yaquiland lost their fight partly through the government's use of the most modern arm of war—the airplane. The nine planes that Manzo had on his front flew constantly over Yaqui territory bombing and spreading terror. The federal planes drove the inhabitants of Bacatete, the capital, into the mountains and finally destroyed it.

Ammunition ran low after the war had raged incessantly for many months, the plane raids continued unceasingly, and finally, cut off from the world and beleaguered from the air, the Yaquis surrendered. Their surrender, however, was conditional. They agreed to take service in the Mexican army provided their own chief, General Ignacio Mori, should be permitted to continue as their head.

Their liberty curtailed by the rigid discipline of the army, the Yaquis were not always good soldiers, although their valor in fighting was unquestioned. The group at Perote was for this reason perhaps little better off than prisoners.

The Yaquis still preserve their ancient language and customs. Although they are Christians, in common with other Indian tribes of Mexico, they have mixed the symbols of Catholicism with the signs of the old gods.

While the Mexican government had to all but exterminate them in order to pacify them, it seems likely that the Yaqui fighting tradition which has existed for 400 years will continue in Mexican memory at least for a long time to come.

New York to Be Record City

New York.—A great city of the future, providing for a population of 20,000,000 with its industries, schools, homes and facilities for comfortable living, is envisaged in the regional planning committee's report for a new and greater New York city.

The report contains proposals designed to meet a situation of continuous growth in the metropolitan area. It considers a city of 5,528 square miles in and about New York, and recommends a vast system of airports, parks, playgrounds, railway, highway, rapid transit and parkway communications, and the building of new bridges and tunnels wherever necessary.

The report was sponsored by the Russel Sage foundation at a cost of $1,000,000 and represented the work of seven years. It was presented by George McAneny, a member of the regional planning committee, before the Engineering Societies' building. The regional plan looks ahead to 1965 and takes as its city 22 counties in and about New York. The area considered is a tenth that of England, as large as the state of Connecticut and nearly five times the size of Rhode Island.

This world city, so vast that the mind of man had never before attempted to cope with such a problem, would be modeled not only for the efficiency of industry but for happiness and welfare of its millions of inhabitants.

There would be parks, playgrounds, golf courses and boulevards, and enough transportation facilities so that the people could move about comfortably and live without undue crowding.

Since the future of aviation is "an unpredictable thing," the plan provides for 16 new airports, making a total of 33.

From these airports passengers would be coming and going in a steady stream. The motif of speed would be maintained in a metropolitan belt line, connecting with all railroads entering the region, so that all points of the city could be reached easily by rail, both by passengers and in the handling of food stuffs and freight.

The city would contain 421 separate communities, in the states of New York, New Jersey and Connecticut—all the territory within a radius of 50 miles from the New York city hall.

Immense Aqueduct Planned

New York.—Work on boring a gigantic aqueduct 20 miles long and 500 feet beneath the surface of New York is to begin in a few months.

The tube, which involves one of the major engineering feats of modern times, is to be installed for the purpose of increasing the water pressure for the residents of Brooklyn and Queens.

Sixteen shafts are to be sunk along the route to the 500-foot level, where hundreds of men are expected to spend four years in boring through the muck and rock. The shafts themselves will be so deep that the Left-court-National building, the city's newest 40-story Fifth avenue skyscraper, would find its tower well below street level if it could be dropped into one of them.

It was announced that 16 electric mine hoists and 62 mine locomotives have been ordered for use in creating the buried aqueduct. It is to begin at the northern end of Van Courtlandt park in the Bronx, extend south and east under the borough, cross twice under the Bronx river, proceed toward Stony Point, cut under the East river to Long Island, cross under Queens and Long Island city, proceed almost the whole length of Brooklyn and terminate at Hamilton avenue, opposite Governor's island in Brooklyn.

The hole to be bored will be 19 feet in diameter—size enough for three motors to be driven through abreast. The workers after descending the shafts and becoming accustomed to the air pressure necessary, are to ream out the tunnel with modern boring machinery and line its walls with a foot-thick coating of concrete as they proceed.

It's a sort of recreation to be back again." "How are you getting on?" I asked him. "I've been more prosperous than I ever had any reason to hope," he said modestly. "I've had mother and my sister to look after and we're more than comfortable. If I did not work any more we could be financially comfortable for life. I'm happy over having made something of my education, happy that I have succeeded in the profession I took up, but I've had more satisfaction in having been able to do something worth while in the community in which I live than in anything else I have been able to accomplish."

Then he told me in a simple modest way of his co-operation in civic and religious enterprises, and the work he had done in the schools, in the political affairs of his town and especially in the boys' organization in which he had always had the keenest interest. It was a more than interesting work and I told him so. He had sensed the real purpose and meaning of free education.

I often ask young fellows who come in to talk to me just why they are getting an education, and I am struck with the almost universal reply that they want to do something that will improve their own personal condition. It is self-improvement that they were after and self-advantage; they give little thought to what their education is going to help them to do for the community in which they are to live.

The purpose of free education is not that the individuals who take advantage of it may have, as one father said to me once of his son, an easier time in life, a softer berth, and larger income. Those of us who have been

I had not seen Van Deventer for twenty years—in fact since he had taken his degree and left college. As an undergraduate he had been well known for various reasons. I had heard from him in directly during the years since he had been out, but, as I say, I had never before met him face to face.

"It's wonderful to get back to the old place," he said as he shook hands with me. "Twenty years is a long time to be away, but seeing the building and the campus and a lot of the old fellows puts new life into me

TWO FAMOUS COMPOSERS HEAD CHAUTAUQUA MUSICAL GROUP

SMITH-SPRING-HOLMES QUINTET

The finest set of musical instruments ever manufactured in this country or abroad is used by the Smith-Spring-Holmes Company which appears on the fourth day of the Chautauqua. These instruments are finished in 22 karat gold, and according to the engraver's time slip turned in at the factory, there is an average of 100 hours engraving time on each instrument. Clay Smith has written almost 200 musical compositions, mostly vocal, while G. E. Holmes has written a like number, most of which are instrumental.

The company will play its entire program without music, thereby cutting out stage waits and speeding up the program. Printed programs will be provided the audience. Every selection played by the company is a special arrangement adapted to their particular instrumentation.

Messrs. Smith and Holmes have been associated in the music field, both as collaborating composers and performers, for the past 28 years. They have learned how to build a program that will register with any audience—not too high for the low-brows, nor too low for the high-brows. Each number of their program is chosen for contrast and for progress without breaking continuity. On their program they will use a pretentious classic played with a precision of attack and a faultless unison of phrasing which calls forth praise from the most severe musical critic. Such a number will be followed by lighter selections from the current musical comedies and the better popular song hits. They realize that the man who can only appreciate a "tune" he can understand is entitled to as much for his money as the trained musician and they select their material accordingly. This artistic group has appeared in many cities as often as ten and twelve times, and during the past year 87% of the engagements of the quintet were return dates.

The programs of the fourth day of the Chautauqua will be the greatest musical treat of the season.

What the Well-Dressed Young Man Is Wearing

THE MANUAL OF ARMS

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

HERE'S what the well-dressed young man is going to wear this summer: high-peaked, wide-brimmed sombrero; soft flannel shirt with narrow black cravat; peg-top woolen breeches; neatly-wrapped spiral leggings, and sturdy marching clogs. The color scheme will be olive drab throughout. On his shoulder he will probably be wearing an army rifle. For the well-dressed young men of the nation are putting on soldier's clothes on a larger scale than ever before since the stirring war days of 1917 and 1918.

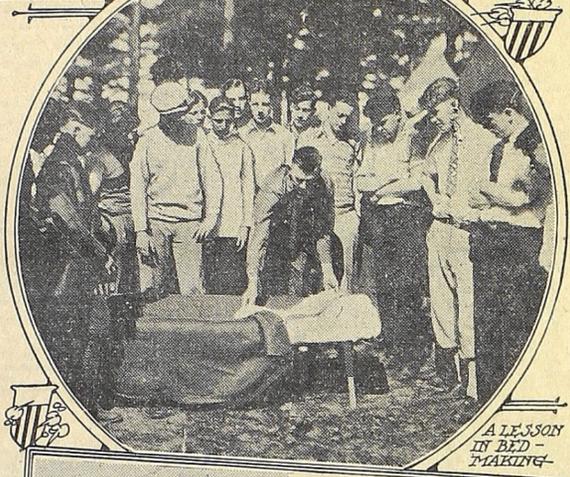

The difference between 1917-1918 and 1929, however, is this: it's a bloodless war that this crop of youngsters is going to fight. And no mother—if one may be permitted to resurrect a phrase which was fortunately soon forgotten—can possibly say in regard to this war that she "didn't raise her boy to be a soldier." For the common enemy which they are going to overcome includes stooped shoulders, flat chests, sagging backbones, too little or too much weight and poor understanding of what American citizenship means.

All of which is by way of saying that at 52 citizens' military training camps, strung all the way from Ft. McKinley, Maine, to Ft. George Wright, Wash., and from Ft. Snelling, Minn., to Ft. Sam Houston, Texas, these youthful volunteers, more than 40,000 of 'em, are coming from farm and factory, from night school in the city and exclusive boys' schools, from cottage and from mansion to assemble for thirty days of camp life under the Stars and Stripes at the expense of their Uncle Sam. "Essentially schools in citizenship" former President Coolidge once characterized the C. M. T. C. For this is America's way of making her young citizens better fitted, both physically and mentally for their duties in citizenship.

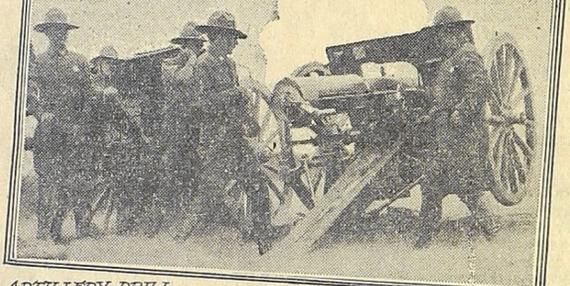

The assembly of the 40,000 this year marks the peak of development of the C. M. T. C. idea since it was started in 1921. Today more than a quarter of a million husky young Americans will testify to the benefits which they have received at the citizens' military training camps, for that is the number, say government statistics, which have attended the camps. In reality they go back to the famous old Plattsburg camps, conceived and sponsored by Col. Theodore Roosevelt and Gen. Leonard Wood, for business men and college students. That was back in 1915 and the value of the training given in the original camps was so soon demonstrated when the United States was drawn into the World war that congress, when enacting the National Defense Act of 1920, authorized the citizens' military training camps.

Although the words military training are a part of that name, making soldiers is by no means the primary aim of the C. M. T. C. movement. No obligation for future military service of any kind is incurred of those who enroll in the camps. The only requirements are the age limits of from seventeen to twenty-four years, good character and sound physique. Free trips to camp and return home and an abundance of wholesome food, uniforms, athletic equipment, laundry service and other necessary expenses are provided by the government. And there are no strings attached to this offer. Uncle Sam simply asks the privilege of taking over for a period of six weeks the training of his sons for the purpose of the following:

"To develop the manhood of the nation by bringing together young men of high and different types from all sections of the country on a common basis of equality and under the most favorable conditions of outdoor life. To teach them the privileges, duties, and responsibilities of American citizenship. To stimulate the interest of the youth of this country in the importance of military training as a benefit to the nation and the individual taking such training. To inculcate self-discipline and obedience and to develop these youngsters, physically, mentally, and morally."

ARTILLERY DRILL

He believes that in return for what he is giving his sons so freely they will repay in kind—as good citizens in times of peace and as voluntary defenders if ever war threatens him. Elaborate preparations have been made to make this year's camps more attractive than have been the popular encampments for the past eight years. These camps offer no vacation in the sense of purposeless squandering of time in idle pursuits or useless diversions, such as indifferent youth may fancy. The camp schedule is not arduous, but for every hour there is a definite aim and occupation. Military drill fills the mornings with short intervals for rest and for the ever-welcome milk period, wisely ordained for those still fast-growing youths. Afternoons are devoted to a wide variety of sports and games, in one or more of which each candidate must take his part.

In the daily program he finds a means to greater physical vigor and control. Military drill brings proper carriage, quickness of response and exact co-ordination of nerve and muscle. Mass calisthenics emphasize these qualities through rhythmic movement. Adequate, varied, nutritious and appetizing diet for thirty days contribute its share to a bodily growth, measured by inches of height and chest expansion and many pounds of weight. Regular hours establish a proper habit of life. Systematic medical inspection wards off any danger of undue exertion and it is supplemented by hospital care in case of need.

We Talk Faster

According to the observation of a well-known stenographic expert, with the passage of 20 years there is an increase in speech at the rate of ten words per minute. People read more, see more, do more and are better educated than they were in the past and it has resulted in quicker thinking and talking.

Radio may jack the speed up even more. When radio was first used in reporting people began to say that it wouldn't be long until the shorthand reporter would be out of business. However, it has proved exactly otherwise. In the last Presidential campaign many newspapers used the radio in getting speeches.

The Sporting Spirit
Military discipline is much praised as a means of education. But the discipline of the spirit is probably worth a great deal more. And if we must have a substitute, what is wrong with the real sporting spirit? In sport well conducted and well organized, it is just as easy to inculcate courage, honor and loyalty. To learn to keep our tempers in a game, to lose gracefully, to win without boasting, to congratulate a fortunate adversary courteously; these are the moral elements of an exercise which brings health to both body and spirit simultaneously. —Quebec Soleil.

Salt water is a better conductor of electricity than fresh water.

The DAIRY

SOY BEANS WILL NOT FLAVOR MILK

No Undesirable Effects Are Found in Illinois Test.

(By W. B. NEVENS, University of Illinois.)

Complaints that the feeding of soy bean hay or ground soy beans to dairy cows affected the flavors of milk, cream, and butter to such an extent that the products were either not salable or their market value was lowered, reached the department of husbandry during the past year. These complaints originated in several different counties in the state, showing that the trouble was not confined to one locality.

Experiments, therefore, were undertaken to learn the cause of the trouble and, if possible, a remedy for it. Three groups of eight each were fed during six consecutive weekly periods on rations consisting of either red clover hay or soy bean hay, and a concentrate mixture with or without ground soy beans. The ground soy beans formed from 10 to 25 per cent of the mixtures. The milk produced was used in studies of flavor and composition, and butter was made from the cream.

Neither high-quality soy bean hay nor poor quality, moldy soy bean hay was found to have any effect upon the flavor of the milk (raw or pasteurized), skim milk, cream, or butter. Ground soy beans were likewise without effect upon flavor. The fat content of the milk was affected but slightly, and the acidity was not changed appreciably. Marked differences in cream volume were noted, but these seemed to be associated with individual cows.

The most pronounced effects of the rations were upon the body of the butter. Ground soy beans caused the body to be gummy and the condition became worse when the proportion of soy beans in the ration was increased. Soy bean hay had a similar effect but to a less degree. There was a tendency for the iodine number to increase slightly with the larger amounts of soy beans in the ration.

While the effects of soy beans upon the body of the butter were not serious, the score of the body of this butter was 1 to 1½ points lower than that of the butter produced by the ration without soy beans. The studies of this problem are being continued, and it is hoped to be able to combine some feed with soy beans which will overcome in a great measure the undesirable effects upon the body of the butter.

Cream Producing Cows Return Monthly Income

When properly fed and cared for the cream producing cow will return a sure profitable income each month in the year. On farms where only one or two cash crops are grown such an income is badly needed to meet the operating expenses of the farm while the cash crops are being grown and marketed. A good average cow when properly fed, will produce 600 gallons of milk annually containing 232 pounds of butterfat. This milk at 30 cents per gallon an average wholesale price, is worth $180. The manure from this cow is worth $20 per year as a fertilizer, making a total income of $200. Where a milk market is not available the butterfat from this cow, at 40 cents per pound, will bring $92.80, when sold to a creamery for butter making, and the skim milk left on the farm is worth $25, as a calf, chicken and pig feed.

Dairy Facts

- Poor land is scarce where cows are abundant.
- Ship cream at least three times a week in hot weather.
- Dull knives in the ensilage cutter increase the power requirement about 50 per cent.
- Had you ever thought that scouring of calves may be caused by a lack of scrubbing feed pails?
- Good breeding and good feeding go hand in hand. Success depends upon combination of the two.
- Cold drafts are responsible for pneumonia, garget, etc. Ventilation should be provided without drafts.
- The safest method for one man to lead a bull is with a staff. This applies with equal force to the gentle and the cross bull.
- Feed flavors enter milk mainly through the body of the cow and not by absorption from the surrounding atmosphere.
- Feed flavors and odors produced in milk usually show a decrease in intensity four hours after feeding and practically disappear in seven hours.
- Highly flavored feeds may be fed immediately after milking without seriously affecting the flavor and odor of the milk produced at the next milking.

FABRICS GLORIFY EVENING GOWN; VERY THIN HAIR HATS IN VOGUE

IT IS the consensus of opinion among fashion connoisseurs that the resplendent beauty of the modern evening gown is above all else a matter of fabric distinction.

Exquisite materials "to work with" has ever been the ambition of style creators whether they be high-degree couturiers or just simple village dress-makers. This season the dream of wondrous fabrics has come true even trancing as that which holds sway in vanity-fair just now. It seems that transparency is the keynote to millinery loveliness this season. Not only are the new capelines thin, but they are very, very thin, so much so one can see ears and hair and facial contour to the point of fascination. Just because a hat is exquisitely transparent does not necessarily mean beyond the hopes and aspirations of those who dreamed. The supply of handsome and novel weaves as we see them about us seems inexhaustible.

The glamorous beauty of evening frocks especially tells a story of the master-artist displayed in weaving of modern silks, velvets, metallics, transparent stuffs, and so the list might be continued in endless citation.

Not only has this flair for fine fabrics brought into being many fascinating new weaves, but it has revived many favorites of the past. In this connection we have in mind the adorable flowered tulle which always gladdened the eye with their quaint patterns and beguiling colorings.

The winsomeness of the debutante frock in the picture is greatly due to the delicate beauty of the Dresden tulle of which it is fashioned. The circular skirt, the semifitted bodice, the sprightly butterfly bow at the back, constitute a trio of significant styling details.

It seems we are not going to have done with prints and patterns, nor even when autumn comes on apace. Already the air is rife with promises of more and yet more to follow of faconne and printed sheer velvets.

that it must be broad-brimmed. In midsummer collections perfectly charming little hair cloches of adorable thinness, like the model to the left in the lower picture, vie with large capelines for supremacy. Lovely they are in any color, especially pale green, beige, rose hue, maize, chartreuse or orange. If you please, for orange is a tremendously smart color just now, and so, by the way, is a new raspberry tint.

As if to surfeit the eye with super-beauty, some of these littler hair shapes are covered with filmy lace, its cobwebby mesh tracing an allover patterning of rare delicacy. For instance, over a wee bonnet of pale green hair, the milliner "who knows," stretches a frail lace of exact tint, perhaps forming Dutch-bonnet points to curtain the ears.

As to the larger hats of this crin-ol or hair some of them are huge in size, but never seeming too much so because of their airy-fairness. Always are their silhouettes manipulated to conform to the individuality of the wearer—a point admirably stressed by the trio of large and transparent capelines here pictured.

The first hat does not show as much draping and intricate handling as do the other two. The model to printed chiffons and even printed crepe satins in stunning colorings.

Speaking of smart colors, just now fashion is exploiting considerable light blue for evening wear. A color which is finding acceptance with an exclusive clientele is a deep golden yellow, almost a pumpkin shade.

When hats are dressy this season, they are very, very dressy. Perhaps the more so, in order to draw a line more definitely between sports or similar types and hats for formal wear. Then, too, so many dresses, this summer, are of the soft fluttery utterly feminine type, the sort tuned to garden fete, bridesmaids' processions, dancant or other festive occasion. Of course none other than the most exquisite millinery confections can becomingly crown beauty so en-the right just below emphasizes the new off-the-face movement—which is achieved by horizontal folds which in turn accomplish the long-back contour which is so chic this season.

While two of the large hats are light, the first one in natural white, the other in pale orchid, the third and last broad brim is black. Its "lines" are all that an artist might covet. A drape and a soft bow of black ribbon velvet is its only trimming—wonderfully effective with flowery or pastel tinted chiffon frocks!

Popular for theater, restaurant and bridal events are certain very beautiful hats made all of pastel maline. These are not necessarily large, most frequently delineating as they do, cunning Dutch-bonnet contours.

SAME PRESCRIPTION HE WROTE IN 1892

When Dr. Caldwell started to practice medicine, back in 1875, the needs for a laxative were not as great as today. People lived normal lives, ate plain, wholesome food, and got plenty of fresh air. But even that early there were drastic physics and purges for the relief of constipation which Dr. Caldwell did not believe were good for human beings. The prescription for constipation that he used early in his practice, and which he put in drug stores in 1892 under the name of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a liquid vegetable remedy, intended for women, children and elderly people, and they need just such a mild, safe bowel stimulant.

This prescription has proven its worth and is now the largest selling liquid laxative. It has won the confidence of people who need it to get relief from headaches, biliousness, flatulence, indigestion, loss of appetite and sleep, bad breath, dyspepsia, colds, fevers. # What the Gray House Hid

The Mystery of a Haunted Mansion

THE STORY

Hilton Hanby has purchased a country place—the Gray house, near Pine Plains, Miss Selenos, a former tenant, warns him that the house is under a curse. Further alarming details are impressed upon Adolf Smucker, Hanby's secretary, by a man who claims to have been chauffeur for Sir Stanford Seymour, former occupant of the place. The Hanbys laugh off the warnings. But they are shocked when they hear that the caretaker of the Gray house, a man named Kerr, has been mysteriously murdered. Hanby consults his friend Pelham. The family starts for the new home. Appleton, a clerk of Douglas and Smith, the agents from whom Hanby bought the Gray house, urges Pelham to dissuade Hanby from occupying the Gray house. Hanby considers asking Leslie Barron, long an admirer of Celia, to join the house party. Mrs. Hanby declares she likes the house. Pelham becomes a member of the household. Leslie Barron arrives making four able-bodied members of the Hanby household. A phone call from a man who declares he is an old acquaintance of Hanby's and interested in ornithology, but whom Hanby cannot identify, urges him to preserve a part of the grounds as a bird sanctuary. The idea appeals to Hanby and he makes the promise. The Hanbys take possession of the Gray house. A stranger introducing himself as Frederick Appleton, calls at the Gray house and is welcomed because of his interest in bird life. Hanby foresees trouble in connection with work to be done on the estate with which he is unfamiliar, and gladly engages Appleton as his agent.

CHAPTER VI—Continued

"Bill," said Les presently, "you give me the idea of being constantly on the watch."
"What do I get five and a quarter a day for?"
"Seriously, Bill, what makes you look as if you thought there was something menacing around?"
"Do I give myself away to that extent? How artless of me! I thought I was just registering firm determination."
"I've seen you stalking around at night. Why? Let me in on it. You know I'm not likely to spill it. Bill, as man to man, what makes you look so darned anxious?"
Bill Pelham lowered his voice.
"As man to man, Les, there is danger. I have made some very remarkable discoveries. You mustn't tell even Junior, because Dina has some psychic way of knowing when her children are worried, and this is not a matter for joking. Here's Junior now."
"Hi, Bill!" Junior shouted, coming toward them. "There's a lawyer lady all the way from New York. Dad wants you to come."
Bill Pelham looked at Les with triumph.
"You see that every one of my statements has been verified. I stated distinctly that she had come from New York to see me. Her shoes were bought at the one city in America where they are sold. Her gloves could only have come from Mustrell's, on the Avenue. I recognized the crumb of cake on her second chin as made only by Mary Elizabeth's New York branch."

The house detective made his way to the big hall. The brisk professional woman was introduced as Doctor Byers.
"I hold degrees in medicine and law," she said. "I really can't say whether I'm here today as a lawyer or as a psychopath."
"Bill," said Hanby, "the great Selenos mystery is about to be cleared up."
"I can hardly agree that it is a mystery," objected the visitor.
"At all events I'm glad you came, and not your vengeful client. She is a dynamo of unpleasant energy."
"How little you know her!" Doctor Byers commented. "If one may regard her as a dynamo, she is the kind of dynamo which uses all its force for a few moments and then has long periods of inertia, during which current is being generated for some future use. I am not sure that my knowledge of dynamo is sound, but you no doubt get my meaning. After her interview with you my client was prostrated for a month. She is intensely nervous now—too nervous, in fact, even to come here."
"I'm bound to say she made a very poor impression on me," Hanby said. "It is her unfortunate way. She suffers intensely from delusions of persecution. She particularly loathes and despises men—justly, I believe."
"What is her interest in this house, from which she was evicted for non-payment of rent?"

"Undoubtedly the Poor Creature is Mad," said Hanby.

desire me not to live here? I should like to know how my family can desert it. I think that was the word she used."
"All she wants to do," said Doctor Byers, "is to be allowed to remove something she buried here. She has had great trouble. It seems that Douglas & Smith referred her to a Mr. Appleton, who had complete charge of houses and properties listed in this county."
"A most conscientious man," Hanby said warmly. "I know him well."
"Perhaps too conscientious. My client, having vivid dislikes immediately declared him to be a libertine scoundrel and thief."
"Your client," asserted Hanby, "should be in the county asylum for the insane."
"I disagree. She is neither dangerous nor likely to become a charge on the community. She believes that Appleton arranged the eviction in order to spite her. Certainly it need not have been so drastic. She did not refuse to pay the rent because she was without means. She refused because certain alterations were not carried out. These alterations were not embodied in the contract that Appleton drew up. Legally she had no case. She is sure that Appleton deliberately tricked her. She was so upset that she went to Algiciras to live. When she came back, she made another effort to rent the place through Douglas & Smith. They referred her to Appleton again, and he refused."
"Why?" Pelham asked. "It stood empty long enough."
"Appleton would not recommend her to old Miss Coryell, who owned it, as a suitable client. Miss Coryell believed in him implicitly. It seems amazing that Mr. Douglas can place such reliance on him."
"Not amazing to those who know him," Hanby retorted, unable to see why Frederick Appleton should be criticized thus.
"My client appealed to successive tenants to allow her to remove what she had buried, but again the Appleton influence intervened. One ten-

Historians Unable to Place Queen of Sheba

The nationality of the queen of Sheba, mentioned in the Bible in connection with a visit to King Solomon, is unknown for certain. It is supposed, however, that "Sheba," is merely a variation of the word "Saba," which was the name of a country on the Red sea in southwestern Arabia. This region is now known as Yemen. The Sabaeans were dark-complexioned white people and belonged to the same general family of mankind as the Hebrews. They had extensive colonies in Africa, where they mingled with the Ethiopians, with whom they are sometimes confused. The Abyssinians have a tradition that the queen of ant, a Mr. Seymour, seemed likely to be agreeable, but Appleton stopped that. He informed Mr. Seymour that a tenant has no legal right to allow any excavation without the consent of the owner, Miss Coryell. Like most Englishmen, Mr. Seymour was afraid of offending against any such statutes as hedge about landowners, and had to refuse. He laid the blame squarely on Appleton. My client, having no legal adviser at the time, behaved with great unwisdom. She hired men to go there by night, and Appleton bobbed up in time to prevent them from entering. I regret to say that Miss Selenos made a regrettable scene."

"I am bound to say I am not drawn to her," Hanby remarked. "I had a very unpleasant interview with her. What has she buried? Why did she bury it?"
"Mr. Hanby," Doctor Byers said in her pleasant voice, "forget for a minute that she offended you. Consider her as a lonely old woman grievously deceived by a man forty years ago. Is she the first to become embittered? Is she the first to turn to what we call the lower animals?"
"You mean those dogs?"
"I mean those dogs. The dog is the only animal that has ever made an alliance with man, the only animal that will brave death for its owner, the only really unselfish thing in the world." Doctor Byers looked about her. "You have everything—one of the loveliest women in America for a wife, beautiful children, riches, and this home. My client has nothing but her love for dogs. The second shock of her life was when four of her dogs were poisoned here. I suppose, if I tell you she believed that Appleton did it, you will smile."
"Undoubtedly the poor creature is mad," said Hanby.
His voice was not so vindictive now. It was true, he thought, that he had everything—health, happiness, freedom from monetary care, a friend like Bill Pelham. Insensibly his mood softened.

"She had leaden caskets made and buried them out on a little lawn where a sundial stood. It shocked her immeasurably to learn that Mr. Seymour had removed the dial and made a tennis lawn. She is now in a position to pay for any damages. I may say I am here to make you an offer for this house considerably in excess of what you paid for it."
"It is not in the market," replied Hanby.
"Then will you let her have the little lead coffins removed?"
Hanby smiled a little.
"I suppose you know that my family, who are devoted to that grass court, will be singularly pleased."
"She is prepared to pay."
"No money will buy a ready-made grass tennis court," he reminded her. "Is that a refusal?"
"Does it mean so much to that old woman?"
"It means so much that you would not believe it."
"All right!" Hanby said, sighing. "Go ahead!"
"But the lawn was not wrecked. With a sharp steel probe, the house detective discovered the leaden boxes. They were immediately under the net. The removal was skillfully done. Even Junior did not know it had taken place."
"Now that it is all over," said Doctor Byers, "I am commissioned to ask Mrs. Hanby if she will accept this emerald."
Hanby could see that the stone set in a pendant, was of great value. "We couldn't think of it," he declared.
"Why not? My client, now that her California property is clear, is certainly worth $5,000,000. She is a very remarkable woman. Please notice that she did not offer this as a bribe. If you do not take it, her directions are explicit. I am to throw it into the lake."
"Oh, Bill!" said Dina, later. "This is another of the things I've always wanted. It's the most gorgeous stone I've ever seen!"
"You never told me so," he replied almost jealously.
"It would have made you unhappy to know there was something you could not give me."
"So that's the Selenos mystery!" he said, meditating. "Poor old soul! She couldn't bear the idea of young barbarians at play on her burying ground. Well, if she's happier now, I'm glad, but as a mystery it has flattered badly."

any of his own. In fact, the memory of that scribbled memorandum had left his added old head entirely.
So imperfect were Mangleston's powers of education that it was not until the doctor had begun serving his sentence for embezzlement that the old man sat in the alley by the garbage cans and painfully spelled out the story spread upon the first page of the city daily; read how Doctor Rebas had come down from Alaska on the same boat with an old acquaintance, David Wemple by name; how Wemple had died so suddenly that he had had no time to make a regular will, but had left his money and a memorandum with his friend and physician, Doctor Rebas, telling him what disposition was to be made of the $90,000 which he, Wemple, carried on his person; how it was to be divided among his relatives; how the temptation had been too great for Doctor Rebas, knowing, as he did, that Wemple's relatives believed the old man to be entirely without means; how the wonderful powers of divination possessed by Mme. Stare, the clairvoyant, had been the means of meting out justice to Doctor Rebas, and giving to Miss Dorothy Wemple of Grand Rapids, Mich., her inheritance of $45,000, and to her brother, Algernon (famously known as "Pug"), $10,000; Mrs. Carrie Hogue, sister of the deceased, $4,375, and the balance of $30,625 to his nephew, Knight Wemple.

The paper told of the strange vision which had come to Mme. Stare, revealing to her Doctor Rebas' whereabouts on the first day of June, on the boat the Gray Gulf, between Juneau and Seattle; how Wemple, his friend, had died on the same boat on June the first; how through her extraordinary powers of divination she had been enabled to locate Wemple's relatives, and to bring the matter to a happy termination, that is, happy to everybody save Doctor Rebas, who didn't deserve anything better.
This termination was especially happy to Mme. Stare. The heirs remunerated her handsomely, and ever since the Rebas trial her office had been crowded with persons eager for information in regard to husbands, wives, lost dogs and digestions.
Old Mangleston murmured, "Well, by gracious! That Stare woman must be a great fortune-teller—that Stare woman must!"
"You be monkeying in my desk?" he demanded.
Mangleston leaned trembling on his broom. "Me? No, sir. For what should I be monkeying in your desk?"
"Well, get out, you make me nervous. You should have had your work in here finished long ago. Get out!"
Not until he was in the hall outside the office did Old Mangleston connect the doctor's temper with the scrap of paper in his own pocket. At Mrs. Schultz's, where he roomed, it came to his mind strongly that the doctor had lost something. It was even possible that the scrap in his own pocket had squeezed out at the back of the lower drawer, as valuable papers have a way of doing. He drew it forth and stared at it intently.
"Dot one-half, Pug 10,000; Carrie one-eighth of remainder, which equals 35,000. How much is the sum of the whole answer?"
"Wha' deyah mean—dot an' pug?" demanded Lena, and held out a skinny hand for the scrap of paper from which Mangleston had read the formula. He gave it to her. She studied it carelessly and returned it to him.
"It ain't no sum," she decided.
"A puzzle, then?" he suggested.
Lena looked at the paper again and again handed it back.
"It ain't no puzzle. It ain't nothin'—just a memorandum somebody has scribbled."
Mangleston was relieved. "Oh," he grunted. "The doctor was mad in the office this morning because he had lost something. I was afraid it was this here. But I couldn't let him see me take it out of my own pocket!"
"What made you put it in your pocket?" demanded Lena sourly. She was tired and had no patience with the old fool Mangleston.
Mrs. Schultz came and leaned over for a glance at the paper. Mangleston's last statement had caught her attention.
"He was mad, was he? Maybe it is something. I will take it with me tonight and show it to Mme. Stare. She knows everything. For a dollar she will tell you where to find your bead bag or the name of the woman who is getting your man away from you. Maybe she will write your boss a letter and say, 'You have lost a paper. For a dollar I will tell you where it is.'"
"No," said Mangleston, "it might lose me my job. I'll take it tomorrow morning and put it in under the desk, and let him find it himself."
"Don't bother," advised Lena. "That paper is nothing. It must have been something else he lost."
"Well, it may be the paper he lost and was mad about," persisted Mrs. Schultz. "Better let me take it to Mme. Stare and let her find it for him. You would let a poor woman like Mme. Stare earn an honest dollar off a rich man like your boss, wouldn't you?"
To this class argument Mangleston yielded reluctantly.
Thus it happened that two weeks later Doctor Rebas received an omniscient command from Mme. Stare, the clairvoyant, to call at once at her office for an interview, or prepare to take the consequences.
Old Mangleston happened to be in the doctor's office when he received the summons, but he did not connect the doctor's fit of frightened rage with

Largest "Room"

The word "room" is not always interpreted in the same way. Some of the places listed might be excluded under some interpretations of the word. Among the largest of which we can find record are the battle gallery of Versailles in France, which is 794 feet long, 43 feet wide, the glass gallery in the same building is 233 feet long, 35 feet wide and 42 feet high. The great hall of the Vatican library, in Rome, is 220 feet long while the Galleria Lapidaria in the Vatican is 700 feet long.

MME. STARE'S WONDERFUL GIFT

(© by D. J. Walsh)

OLD MANGLESTON picked up the scrap of paper from where it fluttered in front of his broom. He had raked it out from underneath the doctor's desk, crumpled, tightly folded, torn at one end. He spread it out clumsily. If there were words on it he would save it. He knew enough for that, at least. It seemed to be a puzzle of some kind; not a prescription, nor a bill, nor a receipt—nothing of importance—just child's scribbling. He regarded it dully. It might be a puzzle. In his youth he had been fond of puzzles and sums and so on, but this was beyond him.

"Dot one-half, Pug 10,000; Carrie one-eighth of remainder, which equals 35,000. Balance to Knight, Grand Rapids, Michigan."
Balance to Knight! After all, this might be important. He looked at the date at the top of the scrap of paper H June 1. And this was July 17. No, this account must have been balanced long ago.
Mangleston put the paper into his vest pocket. Later, when he had finished with the sweeping, he would sit out in the alley by the garbage cans and figure it out.
The doctor arrived in a great hurry. He did not speak to Mangleston, but that was nothing new. He was inclined to tempers, especially in the morning. He went straight to his desk, unlocked and pulled out the lower drawer, drew it out completely and rested it on the floor. He fumbled among the loose papers in the drawer, then turned suspicious eyes upon Mangleston.

"You be monkeying in my desk?" he demanded.
Mangleston leaned trembling on his broom. "Me? No, sir. For what should I be monkeying in your desk?"
"Well, get out, you make me nervous. You should have had your work in here finished long ago. Get out!"

Old Mangleston happened to be in the doctor's office when he received the summons, but he did not connect the doctor's fit of frightened rage with any of his own. In fact, the memory of that scribbled memorandum had left his added old head entirely.

So imperfect were Mangleston's powers of education that it was not until the doctor had begun serving his sentence for embezzlement that the old man sat in the alley by the garbage cans and painfully spelled out the story spread upon the first page of the city daily; read how Doctor Rebas had come down from Alaska on the same boat with an old acquaintance, David Wemple by name; how Wemple had died so suddenly that he had had no time to make a regular will, but had left his money and a memorandum with his friend and physician, Doctor Rebas, telling him what disposition was to be made of the $90,000 which he, Wemple, carried on his person; how it was to be divided among his relatives; how the temptation had been too great for Doctor Rebas, knowing, as he did, that Wemple's relatives believed the old man to be entirely without means; how the wonderful powers of divination possessed by Mme. Stare, the clairvoyant, had been the means of meting out justice to Doctor Rebas, and giving to Miss Dorothy Wemple of Grand Rapids, Mich., her inheritance of $45,000, and to her brother, Algernon (famously known as "Pug"), $10,000; Mrs. Carrie Hogue, sister of the deceased, $4,375, and the balance of $30,625 to his nephew, Knight Wemple.

The paper told of the strange vision which had come to Mme. Stare, revealing to her Doctor Rebas' whereabouts on the first day of June, on the boat the Gray Gulf, between Juneau and Seattle; how Wemple, his friend, had died on the same boat on June the first; how through her extraordinary powers of divination she had been enabled to locate Wemple's relatives, and to bring the matter to a happy termination, that is, happy to everybody save Doctor Rebas, who didn't deserve anything better.
This termination was especially happy to Mme. Stare. The heirs remunerated her handsomely, and ever since the Rebas trial her office had been crowded with persons eager for information in regard to husbands, wives, lost dogs and digestions.
Old Mangleston murmured, "Well, by gracious! That Stare woman must be a great fortune-teller—that Stare woman must!"
"You be monkeying in my desk?" he demanded.
Mangleston leaned trembling on his broom. "Me? No, sir. For what should I be monkeying in your desk?"
"Well, get out, you make me nervous. You should have had your work in here finished long ago. Get out!"
Not until he was in the hall outside the office did Old Mangleston connect the doctor's temper with the scrap of paper in his own pocket. At Mrs. Schultz's, where he roomed, it came to his mind strongly that the doctor had lost something. It was even possible that the scrap in his own pocket had squeezed out at the back of the lower drawer, as valuable papers have a way of doing. He drew it forth and stared at it intently.

"Dot one-half, Pug 10,000; Carrie one-eighth of remainder, which equals 35,000. How much is the sum of the whole answer?"
"Wha' deyah mean—dot an' pug?" demanded Lena, and held out a skinny hand for the scrap of paper from which Mangleston had read the formula. He gave it to her. She studied it carelessly and returned it to him.
"It ain't no sum," she decided.
"A puzzle, then?" he suggested.
Lena looked at the paper again and again handed it back.
"It ain't no puzzle. It ain't nothin'—just a memorandum somebody has scribbled."
Mangleston was relieved. "Oh," he grunted. "The doctor was mad in the office this morning because he had lost something. I was afraid it was this here. But I couldn't let him see me take it out of my own pocket!"
"What made you put it in your pocket?" demanded Lena sourly. She was tired and had no patience with the old fool Mangleston.
Mrs. Schultz came and leaned over for a glance at the paper. Mangleston's last statement had caught her attention.
"He was mad, was he? Maybe it is something. I will take it with me tonight and show it to Mme. Stare. She knows everything. For a dollar she will tell you where to find your bead bag or the name of the woman who is getting your man away from you. Maybe she will write your boss a letter and say, 'You have lost a paper. For a dollar I will tell you where it is.'"
"No," said Mangleston, "it might lose me my job. I'll take it tomorrow morning and put it in under the desk, and let him find it himself."
"Don't bother," advised Lena. "That paper is nothing. It must have been something else he lost."
"Well, it may be the paper he lost and was mad about," persisted Mrs. Schultz. "Better let me take it to Mme. Stare and let her find it for him. You would let a poor woman like Mme. Stare earn an honest dollar off a rich man like your boss, wouldn't you?"
To this class argument Mangleston yielded reluctantly.
Thus it happened that two weeks later Doctor Rebas received an omniscient command from Mme. Stare, the clairvoyant, to call at once at her office for an interview, or prepare to take the consequences.
