The Bay City gun club will compete Sunday, July 21, at the Tawas gun club grounds, Tawasville, against shocters from the Tawas club. This will be the first of a series of strictly amateur shoots which will be held this season. The succeeding shoots will be held, one at Harrisville, one at Alpena, and two at Bay City. The dates of these will be announced later.

This series of matches has been ing the beginner as well as the more experienced shooter. The one-half of the 50 targets will have the same chance to win a prize as the one who breaks 50 straight. The cost of the shoot will be held will be for prizes only. There will be no cash awards.

About 30 shooters from the nor-BEST PICTURES OF 1929 thern cities are expected to compete here a week from Sunday and about the same number is expected from Ray City. Everyone interested in this sport should plan to attend, as an exceptionally fine time and some interesting events are assured.

Roxie Roach says that the grounds will be open at 10:00 next Sunday for practice shooting. Some of those who are in the line-up against Bay City are Roxie Roach, Hymie Friedman, Miles W. Weed and Lloyd McKay of

The five high scores from each team at each shoot will be taken and at the end of the series the team having the most broken targets will be winner, so the shooters each club has the better its chances for winning.

Tricky Trickster At Chautauqua

EUGENE FRYE, MAGICIAN

The magician and his mysterious manipulations have a strong appeal for everyone. The mature man and the child both know that the magician never does the thing that he seems to do, but there is such a fascination in the attempt to figure out just what he did do that made him appear to do something else, that a good magic performance never loses its appeal.

Eugene Frye and his company of assistants have, during the past winter season, entertained audiences from the Pacific Coast to the Atlantic Coast, and throughout the South. Frye is recognized as one of the platform's foremost magicians—a student in the realm of magic who is constantly seeking new tricks and illusions and new ways of presenton the second afternoon Frye and his company will present a delightful program following the musical pre-lude of the Miles-Raach Duo.

ELWOOD T. BAILEY

A dynamic and dramatic orator, blessed with a keen sense of humor
—a close student of social and economic conditions as they deal with business and humanity. These qualities describe accurately Elwood T. Bailey, California business man whose ability as an interesting and entertaining speaker is known from Coast to Coast. His mind is stored with brilliant and beautiful gems of genius-his lecture sparkles with wit and wisdom-and throughout his address sane sense is driven home with graphic phrase.
His lecture, "Full Speed Ahead" is a concrete message, built on facts gathered from a long study of human nature in business, society and religion. This orator has thrilled hundreds of thousands in every part of the country. Those who miss him will regret it. It is particularly desired that people who think they "do not like lectures" should attend.

THESE sketches and directions "how-to-make" a perfectly adorable bonnet-and-apron ensemble should interest fair gardeners who aspire to look as sprightly and lovely as the flowers they cultivate.

The thrilling thing about the bonnet is that it is really nothing more or less than a flat three-cornered piece which can be ironed as easily as a handkerchief, and which through ingenious fastenings can be formed into a bonnet.

As is so clearly shown in the picture, the bonnet is made out of plain and print, while the apron is made of the print, piped with the solid color. In this instance green percale is combined with a handsome "confetti" patterning, which introduces gay reds and blues and yellows.

There is no opening at the sides, the pointed and piped front portion being stitched to the back portion.

It is very old-fashioned to think of gingham in terms of kitchen aprons and workaday house frocks, for gingham this year registers in set having adopted gingham for its very own, is wearing it throughout the informal hours of the day. The idea is to cut a three-cornered piece out of one of these squares, two sides of the square forming two sides of the rightangled triangle. Curve it across the other two sides thus forming the third side of the triangle as shown in Fig. A. B. C. Hem this triangle of plain percale or gingham or sateen all around-about a 14-inch hem.

Next cut out of the printed material a panel about 9 inches wide, shaping it to fit the curved end of the triangle (see Fig. D. E.). Finish this all around with a ruflle of white organdie 11/2 inches wide. Then machine-stitch row after row this printed part after fitting and basting it to the triangle-(see sketch in lower left corner). Cut a pointed strap measuring 21/2 inches

Along with its other accomplishments gingham has succeeded in mak ing itself generally popular in the beach and bathing suit realm.

Somehow, we think of Ferdinand de Soto as being first. Yet if you will look closely into the records of his explorations into Florida you will find he could not have been. For when he arrived in Florida he found there one John Ortiz, a native of Seville, Spain, who had been a captive of the Ortiz was captured by the Indians while seeking trace of Pamphilo de Narvaez, who was appointed governor of Florida in 1527. De Narvaez had sailed for Florida with five ships carrying 400 foot soldiers and 20 horsemen. He had bravely marched inland.

Several years later, four men, the only known survivors of the expedition, reached the Spaniards in Mexico. De Narvaez' wife, or widow, clinging to hope that he might be found, organized a searching party. Thirty men with a brigantine set out. John Ortiz was a member of the party

Rumor had it that De Narvaez and his party had been blown ashore somewhere on the Gulf coast in a storm, The searching party therefore started in to sail along the coast. One day they spied a number of Indians on the beach.

The Indians fastened something white on the end of a stick, stuck it up in the sand and drew back, beckoning the Spaniards to approach. Possibly a letter from De Narvaez! The searchers were much excited. Also they mistrusted the Indians. Finally, John Ortiz and one other man volunteered to go ashore.

They came carrying a white flag, but the Indians either did not know the meaning of the flag of truce or ignored it. Anyway, they set upon the two white men. Ortiz was captured and the other man, offering resistance, was killed.

Ortiz was taken to the village of a chief known as Ucita. Here a fire was kindled and the captive was informed he would be killed by fire and torture. However, as the fire blazed, a daughter of the chief entered a plea on his behalf and he was permitted to live.

Years passed and Ortiz labored as a slave. His task was to guard a sort of morgue, a strange house where the dead were laid. At night time wolves would come out of the forest seeking to devour these dead. Ortiz' job was to protect the bodies.

Whenever his vigilance grew lax or he otherwise would displease his captors, they would kindle a fire and threaten to roast him. Finally one night a pack of wolves made a raid on the burial house. Though Ortiz battled them with a heavy club, they succeeded in carrying off the body of a young man, son of a chief.

That morning fires were kindled and it seemed sure that Ortiz would die this time. But when a party of men, seeking the body, came upon it in the edge of the brush, together with the body of a wolf that Ortiz had beaten to death, the decision was reversed and he was restored to Finally this life, with death from fire always seeming to be just around the corner, palled on Ortiz and he fled to the village of Mocoso, chief of a neighboring tribe and enemy of Ucita. Here he fared better. Then one day a runner brought word that some white men in boats were coming ashore. They were De 'oto's men.

John Ortiz approached them, but mistaking him for an Indian because he was so sunburned and dressed in Indian garb, they all but killed him before he could make his identity known.

In his years of captivity Ortiz had learned to speak several Indian dialects. He became interpreter for De Soto and was of great value to him in his contacts with Indian tribes. Ortiz never got back to Spain. He died somewhere west of the Mississippi, probably on the Red river, in 1542. De Soto, who also died that year, lost more than 200 of his 600 men. The leaderless survivors floated down the Mississippi and finally reached a Spanish colony at Panuco,

Myths and Legends of Chinese and Indians

The Chinese pantheon has gradually become so full that there is scarcely a being or a thing which is not, or has not been at some time or other propitiated or worshiped.

When Chinese emperors died, their other selves continued to exist and to hold the same rank in the spirit world as they did in this one.

According to old Chinese mythology, the world of spirits is an exact counterpart of the Chinese empire.

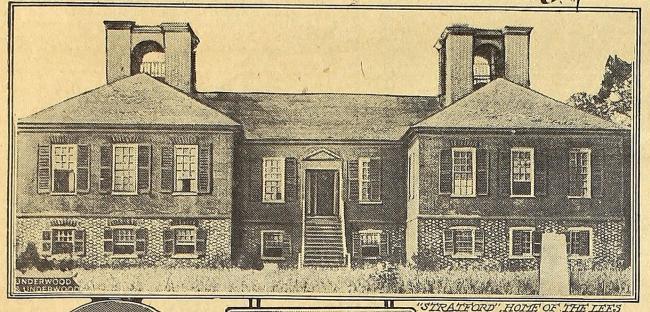

Some American Indian tribes adopted the serpent as a symbol of time. Among the Indians the serpent typified lightning.

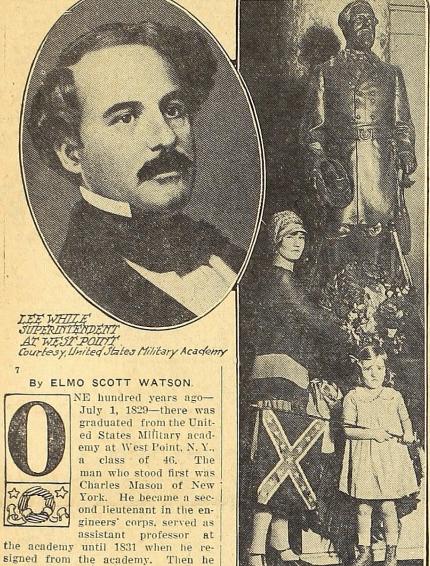

The Cherokee Indians usually marked out the seventh son as a suitable person for the priesthood. In Indian mythology the rocks and trees were believed to be the living tombs of imprisoned spirits. The ancient Persians considered the tree to be the emblem of human existence owing to the changes which it undergoes during the various seasons. Some of the ancient writers tell of wonderful trees whose leaves produced animals and insects.

> Every incident of that visit is indelibly-stamped on my memory. All he said to me then and during subconversations is still fresh in my recollection. It is natural it should be so, for he was the ablest general, and seemed to me the greatest man I have ever conversed with, and yet I have had the privilege of meeting Von Moltke and Prince Bismarck, General Lee was one of the few men who ever seriously impressed and awed me with their inherent greatness. There were three Hubbards, if you did not count Humbolt, the ancient fox-terrier, who was so much a member of the family that he must be treated like one. Mr. Hubbard had a position which brought him in a big salary which he clung to with a grip little short of niggardliness. He loved solitude and silence, had throat trouble incessantly. Besides that he worked in his garden. Nothing else seemed to interest him. Mrs. Hubbard had a slight figure which she suffered torments of dieting to keep slight. Thinness was her chief charm and her constant boast-she could wear youthful styles and sizes. For the rest she had slightly crossed eyes and an ugly pursy mouth out of which flew a full set of china whenever she found occasion to open her lips. Gwendolyn, the daughter, was twenty-four and with one thought-to get married and away from her taciturn father and her moody mother, with whom she was never on good terms. Gwendolyn was languid and tall and dark, ate chocolates with inordinate fondness and dreamed dreams of doing something bigger and better than the other girls in town, without, however, having the least inclination to strive for the realization of her ambitions. She was cordially disliked by her acquaintances and on moonlight nights she was left to moon on her elegant porch while less lovely but more gracious girls went motoring in crowds.

Announcement of the sale,

in the hearts of all his countrymen.

If the Hubbard's dog went exploring in a neighbor's garden or buried a bone in somebody's flower bed or chased a cat, or licked a much smaller dog one endured outwardly, for if a word of protest were uttered Mr. Hubbard would take his pipe out of his mouth and proceed to freeze the humble objector to the spot. If Gwendolyn, seeking an appropriate garland, helped herself to Mrs. Lyon's lilacs or crab blossoms or Mrs. Hyde's blossoming almond which leaned obligingly close to the line, or if desiring a bunch of grapes she calmly broke off a bunch of Mrs. Gordon's famous white beauties, nothing was said. There were, however, many hot little conferences in private and sometimes Mrs. Hyde declared she "would do something desperate," but, oh, la! Nobody ever did.

Then the Goulds moved into the neighborhood, in the little green house with the garden which adjoined the Hubbard place on the back. Mrs. Gould was a sweet-faced little woman with pretty, soft eyes, and a shy smile. Mr. Gould was a stay-at-home, quiet man who put in all his spare time working in his garden. The early morning sound of his hoe was about all the disturbance the Goulds were likely to make in the neighborhood.

the first step in the plan sponsored by the William Alexander Chapter of the Daughters of the Confederacy to make the place "not merely a shrine, It was then that the Hubbards produced a new nuisance in the neighborhood—a flock of doves. They billed and cooed under the eaves of Mrs. Gordon's house, awakening her early and keeping her awake. Mrs. Gordon was a poor sleeper and needed all the rest she could get. Worse of all they invaded gardens. Mrs. Hyde's English violet bed became a ruin; the doves loved the succulent crinkly white roots. They descended upon Mr. Lyon's pea vines and neatly denuded them of the runners without which no pea vine can yield a crop. They were far more destructive than chickens and absolutely invulnerable, for they descended from the air and, mischief done, ascended again into the air before a finger could be raised.

Mr. Gordon appealed to Mr. Hubbard, who only took his pipe out of his mouth long enough to say grandiloquently that they did not belong to him any more than to other folks. Pigeons were pigeons, wanderers of the air. Mr. Lyon likewise made a complaint, but Mr. Hubbard had no time that morning to hear complaints.

The pigeons descended in a body upon the Gould's garden and when at last they teetered away on pink feet and with rustling of their crisp wings there was no longer need for Mr. Gould's hoe. He scratched his head and sighed when Mr. Lyon and Tom Gordon and Will Hyde leaned over the fence, themselves exasperated, to see what had been done.

Then out came little Mrs. Gould. Her eyes were full of tears.

"What can we do?" asked Tom Gordon. "We've appealed to Hubbard as man to man. It is up to you womenfolk now, I guess."

"My wife," said Mr. Lyon, "is a patient sufferer. She has given up being anything else." "Mary," said Will Hyde, "takes it out in crying."

"My missus," grinned Henry Wallace, who had joined the group, "takes it out on me. I guess if old Mars should tumble off its orbit she'd accuse me of giving it a kick."

Little Mrs. Gould listened and weighed every word

"You say Mr. Hubbard denies that those pigeons belong to him?" she demanded. "Well, they do, don't they?" "Oh, yes, they do, of course," replied Tom Gordon: "And we all know they | age be in danger of serious damage

But we can't prove it, therefore we can't make him put a stop to their depredations. So all we can do is to grin and bear it, I guess." Mrs. Gould turned and went into the house without another word. Next day when the men came home

All that afternoon they remained invisible. And that evening the neighbors began to question each other. Even Mr. Gould scratched his head in Fifteen minutes later when Mr. Pratt drove away with the pigeons Mrs. Gould rejoined the group with a crisp $5 bill in her hand.

Geologists Find Pearls Millions of Years Old

Ten pearl-like fossils found by geologists of the University of California in rocks laid down about 25,000,000 years ago have proved under test to be real pearls, conforming in structure with the modern variety, and having as their source mollusca related to the present pearl oyster.

The pearls were uncovered while the university men were searching for fossils of the Cretaceous period near Redding, Calif. In spite of their 25,-000,000-year burial from the time dinosaurs were making their last stand on earth, the pearls still maintain a little of their luster.

Such finds are extremely rare. Some years ago one was reported in England, from the same mollusc and the same period in the earth's history, and one other from the same period has been reported from Texas. In threesixteenths to five-sixteenths of size the California pearls vary from an inch in diameter .- Kansas City Star.

Fish Out of the Sea

The fish that glitter in countless glass globes may not be gold but their scaly armor reflects a gleam as radiant as that of any precious metal. It is too had to let their splendor become dimmed through neglect of the fish bowl. The outer surface may be kept clean and shining by frequent polishing with a soapy cloth, followed by rubbing with a dry cloth, Occasionally the fish should be transferred by means of a fish net into a pail of fresh water and the bowl given a thorough soap and water washing.

Longevity of Alligators

There is little definite information on the subject of longevity among alligators. Many authorities state that an alligator does not reach its full adult growth until it is between forty and sixty years old and that their normal longevity is between one hundred and two hundred years. It is very probable that some of the sacred crocodiles of India, which are closely related to alligators, are considerably more than a century old. Alligators have been kept in captivity for 40 years .- Exchange.

Dog Saved His Master

It pays to be kind to dumb animals. The life of Patrick Welch, of Bend. Ore., was saved by his faithful sheep dog which carried a blood-stained glove to a camp three miles distant and led a searcher back into the hills. Welch had gone there to hunt, and his rifle was accidentally discharged, the bullet ranging through his hip. Unable to walk he tied his glove, covered with his own blood, to the dog's neck. The dog ran to the camp and brought the herder back to where Welch lay bleeding to death.

"Too Close to the Wind"

A person undertaking a risky business is often said to be "sailing close to the wind." A fore-and-aft rigged sailing vessel may progress at a more or less acute angle into the wind, depending upon its build. But if the skipper tries to sail too directly into the wind-his sails will shake and swing violently athwartship, often with serious damage; so may a person who attempts more than he can mar sure, the most satisfactory agent, is seldom available. In its absence, a sufficient quantity of boiling water gives good results. Pails, strainers, etc., after washing are scalded by pouring a pint of boiling water over the entire inner surface; cans are best treated by pouring in a quart of boiling water, replacing the lid, and rolling the can along the floor to ensure thorough scalding of the inner surface. As the temperature of the water drops over 50 degrees Fahrenheit during this operation a fresh quantity must be provided for each

Because of the saving in time and fuel, chlorine solutions are being used in some districts to replace the scalding treatment, and where used intelligently have equal or superior sterilizing efficiency. Cans and pails are carefully rinsed with chlorine solution as in the scalding treatment, or immersed for one minute in a tank containing the solution. Either is satisfactory, provided the utensils are well washed and the chlorine solution is up to strength.

Feeding Cows Grain in Summer Is Profitable There are some splendid lessons to be learned from cow testing associations because of the records they keep. One herd of eight cows that was fed an average of three pounds of grain per day during June and July last year produced 3,550 pounds more milk and 186 pounds more fat than the same cows produced during the corresponding two months the year before, when no grain was fed to supplement the pasture. Valuing the grain mixture at $30 a ton, the extra feed cost $22.50. If we assume that the 186 pounds of butterfat had a value of 40 cents a pound, the increase in the gross income was $74.-40. The net profit from grain feeding during those two months, therefore, amounted to $52, or $3.25 per cow per month. As a rule the better the cows the larger will be the returns from grain feeding on pasture.

Dairy Cow Production Shows Large Increase

Great changes have taken place in the past few years in the dairy industry. For one thing, the average production of our cows has increased greatly. The census figures in 1920 show that there were 23,750,000 dairy cows in this country and they produced a total of 89,500,000,000 pounds of milk.

In 1926, the total number of cows in this country had dropped to 22,-166,000, but they produced a total of 120,750,000,000 pounds of milk.

That's 7 per cent fewer cows, and they gave 34.7 per cent more milk, quite a remarkable change in a few years time. This change is a tribute to the value of educational endeavor, promoting better breeding, better feeding, and better care of dairy cows, but especially better feeding.

Increase in Number of Cows Tested in Country

Cow testing associations in the United States showed a remarkable growth during 1928. There was a 15 per cent increase in associations, with a total of 465,804 cows under test.

California leads in the total number of cows under test and also in the percentage of cows which are being tested. There are four states that beat California in the number of herds under test, as most of her herds were large. Wisconsin stands second in total number of cows under test and first in number of herds. Minnesota ranks third in number of cows and Iowa fourth. Iowa now has 2.7 per cent of her dairy cattle under

Valuable Cow Feed

Beet tops are a valuable feed for cows although as they contain only about ten pounds of dry matter per 100 they should form but a part of the roughage ration. In feeding value they are worth about half as much as the same weight of good corn silage. Beet tops are readily preserved in a silo of any kind. In Germany where enormous quantities are used for feed the trench silo is in general use. If put in as cut they carry too much water.

The young fresh water clam or mussel leads an uncertain life. Only comparatively few of the millions left by each mother clam to shift for themselves in the depths find the right kind of fish on which to live for the necessary parasitic early existence.

Linen and wool were the common fabrics worn on that luminous peninsula, but classical literature contains many references to thin, highly expensive garments called Amorgian tunics, Miss Richter declared recently in a report to the Archeological Institute of America.

They are thought to have been made of especially fine linen from the island of Amorgos, a rocky bit of land in the Aegean, with, however, only a few tiny valleys fertile enough for the cultivation of flax; hardly enough, according to Miss Richter, to support an important industry of even a high priced article. Supporting her theory by research among ancient Greek and Latin writers she has established a hypothesis that the havoc-creating Amorgian tunics were made of wild silk

The name Amorgian (a specific word for silk appearing in Greek only after the Roman era) she accounts for by the fact that the island was a convenient station on the trade route from the east via the Persian gulf, Babylon and Tyre.

The story is that a Mexican train of 120 wagons and 82 men on the way to Independence, Mo., over the Santa Fe trail with a load of silver, was attacked by Indians. The savages were repulsed and then began a five-day siege which culminated with the massacre of all except one of the Mexicans. He came from New Jersey, so the legend on his cap indicated, and he was a member in good standing I take it in all sorts of organizations, the Insignia of which were attached to various parts of his clothing. There were keys and ivory teeth and jeweled and engraved emblems hanging from his watch chain, and attached to his waistcoat were two or three pins, while decorating the lapel of his coat were buttons and ribbons and a variety of parti-colored announcements which indicated to the curious observer where he had been and what had been going on and whom he had voted for, and how many times he had been to conventions of this sort before, One could almost read his personal history from birth by the badges he

It is a curious habit which most of us Americans have of broadcasting our beliefs and affiliations by the badges we wear. We seem to keep nothing to ourselves. The elderly gentleman just at the other end of the seat in which I am now sitting in the railway station is a clergyman in the Anglican church it is quite easy to make out from the cut of his garb and the gold cross which dangles from his watch guard. The young man beside him goes to college at Michigan, belongs to the Sigma Nu fraternity and a sophomore social organization and is a Republican. All this he announces to the world by the decorations which adorn his front. An engineer and a shriner in one fust walked past me. I know by the gold decoration in his lapel and by the Tau Beta Pi key which caught my eye as he went by. He was evidently a good student in college and is not ashamed for everybody to know it.

It doesn't seem exactly modest to be metaphorically shouting as we walk down the street that we are Presbyterians or Elks or members of the plumbers' union, or whatever we do belong to, but there must be some glory or advantage in the custom or not so many Americans would follow it.

DR. CALDWELL'S THREE RULES

Dr. Caldwell watched the results of constipation for 47 years, and believed that no matter how careful people are of their health, diet and exercise, constipation will occur from time to time. Of next importance, then, is how to treat it when it comes. Dr. Caldwell always was in favor of getting as close to nature as possible, hence his remedy for constipation is a mild vegetable compound. It can not harm the most delicate system and is not habit forming.

The Doctor never did approve of drastic physics and purges. He did not believe they were good for human beings to put into their system. What the Gray House Hid

The Mystery of a Haunted Mansion

By Wyndham Martyn

THE STORY

Hilton Hanby has purchased a country place—the Gray house, near Pine Plains. Miss Selenos, a former tenant, warns him that the house is under a curse. Further alarming details are im-pressed upon Adolf Smucker Hanby's secretary, by a man who claims to have been chauffeur for Sir Stanford Seymour, former oc-cupant of the place. The Han-bys laugh off the warnings. But they are shocked when they hear that the caretaker of the Gray house, a man named Kerr, has been mysteriously murdered. Hanby consults his friend Pel-ham The family starts for the new home. Appleton, a clerk of Douglas and Smith, the agents from whom Hanby bought the Gray house, urges Pelham to dissuade Hanby from occupying the Gray house. Pelham becomes a member of the household. A phone call from a man who de-clares he is an old acquaintance of Hanby's, urges him to pre-serve a part of the grounds as a bird sanctuary. The Hanbys take possession of the Gray house A stranger introducing himself as Frederick Appleton, calls at the Grav house and is welcomed be-cause of his interest in bird life. Hanby engages Appleton as his agent. The Selenos mystery is

CHAPTER VII

Consider for a moment the case of the unfortunate Adolf Smucker, bereft of a job and soured by the difficulty of finding another. Until he was discharged he had not known that his status among his neighbors was wholly due to their mistaken estimate of the importance of his position in the office of Hilton Hanby, of Leonard street, woolen merchant. The only jobs open to him were of a sort that would have lowered him in the eyes of his friends, his family, and the young men paying court to his daughters.

Nor was this all. Like many another careful man, he had deeded his property to his wife, to find, too late, that such a beneficiary regards the gift as entirely her own. He was to learn that Mrs. Smucker had long known of his inefficiencies as a provider. After that fateful sentence. "Dolf, you've fired yourself," she knew that the task of looking after things was hers. She had long wondered at Mr. Hanby's unusual for bearance.

Smucker was conscious that he had fallen from the domestic pedestal. He saw that he was no longer of prime importance. His meals were now no better than those given these many years to his old father; and the old man dared to jeer at him, to question his interpretation of politi cal events, and to denounce him as a

The wild look in Smucker's eye be came wilder. He was no longer com pelled to shave every day. Mrs. Smucker and the girls pressed his pants no more. He frequented more intensely those little clubs of mal contents whose members spoke behind locked doors of the time coming when the 'land would be as red as ever Russia was red. They did not especially welcome Smucker, since they were mainly of foreign birth and speech; but the chief organizers, who knew men, marked him down as one who could be worked upon if needed.

There must always be some first man to hurl a bomb or throw phosphorus cakes among ripening crops The best were those like Smucker. who had nursed grievances against richer and more capable men until hatred flamed up at a word of encouragement, and who had no exact knowledge of the details of the movement, or of the names of the active conspirators. Smucker came to depend upon these haters of rule, these enemies to society, for the cheap cigarettes he smoked. He posed as an honest man whom capital had thrown, broken, into life's gutter. They affected to believe him. He was a tool to be used at need.

One day the Smuckers, in family council, decided that Adolph should ask Mr. Hanby for some such letter of recommendation as might enable him to get a clerical position in one of the Weehawken factories. His trousers were pressed, and his shoes shined, and he turned cityward. He did not like the prospect at all, but the Smuckers in council had a massed psychology which overrode all objec-

His family was against him. Those who had listened to him respectfully now turned and jeered. People passing him wondered why he talked to himself so constantly. They could not guess that he was again experiencing vengeful visions of what he would do when he got into power. In these dreams he now included even his old father, who made ten dollars a week, his taunting children, and the two young men who despised him as a future father-in-law. By this time Hilton Hanby occupied a more prominent position than ever in these schemes of punishment. Hanby was the prime cause of it all. Hanby was capital incarnate. Well the Commune was coming soon!

Smucker demanded to see Mr

"You were always a liar," said Smucker.

"And you were always a thief." shouted the other. "I've got your number! I've seen you pinching stamps, and I got the blame for it!"

"You are the serf of a capitalist," said Smucker. "You are lickspittle of the forces that hold us down. We shall have uses for your kind when the day comes!"

"You are a d-d anarchist!" cried the boy.

Here he was interrupted by the office manager, who looked over his glasses at Smucker and frowned. He listened to Smucker's request for a recommendation.

"Not with my consent," he announced. "Don't make a scene," he added sharply. "You were lazy and insubordinate, and you padded our expenses. I'll put that in the letter, if t helps you. You are taking up office time. Get out!"

"Never!" said Smucker, snarling

The office boy opened the door in the railings and took Smucker by the shoulder. He was a strong boy, and he ached to use his muscles on the man he detested.

In the corridor, outside, Smucker fell. His head struck a gleaming cuspidor placed conveniently by the elevator to tempt the promiscuous expectorator. Here he lay, screaming imprecations. Here, he declared, he would wait until a policeman came to see how he had been assaulted.

The office boy, feeling a little scared, withdrew. Olsen, the elevator man, implored in vain. A nervous tenant telephoned for the police.

All might have been well for Smucker, and he might have won his proposed suit for damages had not he made the mistake of denouncing the officer as foully as his political associates denounced those in charge of the nation's destiny.

"I'm a bloated timeserver wearing the livery of official degradation, am I?" snapped the policeman. His strong hand fastened itself about Smucker's neck and hauled him to his feet "There's a day coming soon when my fat throat will be cut, is there? Come and tell that to the sergeant at the desk !"

The policeman knew Smucker's sort. He had no intention of taking him anywhere but out into the street There were many such half-crazed men in Manhattan. He would throw a scare into the fellow-and he did. Smucker now saw that escape was his main object in life. He observed too, that the policeman's grip was not very strong. He ducked, broke the hold, and disappeared into the crowd. It all happened as the officer had expected, and he went about his duty; but the episode made an enormous difference in Adolf Smucker. He was now a hunted man. The police wanted him. He was escaping from the tyranny of capital. His home would already be marked. He was an out-

He dived into the subway station at City hall. An hour later he was sitting on a bench near Grant's tomb. A woman with a baby carriage moved hurriedly away when he suddenly burst into merriment. Smucker had forgotten all about his father's little hoard of savings-thirty dollarswhich he had taken as the old man lay asleep after his night's work at

A train noisily puffing along on the river bank gave him a new idea. He would find Hanby, and would punish him as the author of all his misfortunes. Cordons of police were probably waiting for him at the ferries, but they would not be watching the railroad stations yet. He remembered that Pine Plains was the station, and that it was served by the Newburgh, Dutchess and Columbia railroad.

It was dark when Smucker skulked along the road from Pine Plains to the Gray house. It was a long, weary walk, and Smucker usually tired easily, but tonight he walked on air. He talked aloud. He denounced his ene mies and exulted in their doom.

Reason and madness were fighting for the possession of his mind. Perhaps Smucker had never been wholly sane. It needed some such precipitating cause as this to give the battle to the darker forces. When big motor cars passed him, he spat

It was almost ten when he reached Hanby's estate. Sheltering behind a great elm, he saw two people cantering toward him. The bright moonlight revealed Hilton Hanby and his wife. Mrs. Hanby wore a light liner

Then the intruder came upon the swimming pool by the house. He recognized the Hanby children and Pelham. The big noisy man was Brophy. the banker. There were half a dozen others, laughing, diving. Other civilizations had wantoned thus on the eve of disaster, Smucker gloated.

The sound of music led him nearer the brightly lighted mansion. He peered through a rear window, and saw that here even the servants reveled. He scowled as he recognized the impudent girl who had let him into the duplex apartment. She was dancing with a manservant. So the Hanbys had flunkies to wait on them

Smucker had not determined on his manner of revenge. He realized that he must employ cunning, not force. He was a lone man among many. He cursed himself for not buying a revolver. He had not even a knife. He withdrew from the house, and sank into the shadows. He would lie down somewhere and plan what

A sound as of the clicking of a rifle trigger made him turn his frightened head. He realized in that moment that he had forgotten the possibility of police pursuit. Now he was conscious of its imminence. On a little mound fifty feet distant, his body silhouetted against the bright moonlight, stood a man, with a rifle resting in the crook of his left elbow. So on a hundred rolls of film had Smucker seen warders and jailers stand, waiting to kill escaping prisoners. As he looked, the unknown raised his rifle. It seemed to the terrified man that it was pointed. directly at him.

With a screech hardly human. Smucker dived into the nearest shadows and began a race for life. He heeded not where he went, so long as he could seek darkness and escape from the white and mocking moonlight. That he was approaching the house he did not notice until the lighted windows brought him to a

Vigilant Law Officer Had Seen 'Em Doing It

Speeding across the country from | ture people an' the charge I'm prefer Los Angeles to New York by motor, two motion-picture celebrities were held up by the constable in a small town and, as usual, the officer had all the advantage on his side. He refused to give them a ticket and finally compromised by taking them directly before the judge. The constable was very hot under the collar and declared he would make it hot for them, but the couple were hardly prepared for the outraged officer's charge in court.

"Your honor," he announced pompously, "this is a couple of motion-pic-rin' against them is arson.'

"Arson!" roared one of the ac cused. "What do you mean! We were never out of our car till you flagged

"You was burnin' up the road, an' I'm preferrin' the charge of arson against you," insisted the constable and even the court had to laugh as he let them off with a five dollar fine

"I Never Worry when they're in the Whippet"

This low-priced car has every modern feature for driving safety and dependable performance

ADVANCED, modern engineering throughout the entire chassis of the new Superior Whippet is responsible for smoothness and reliability of performance, consummate ease of handling, and maximum driving safety.

Whippet's big four-wheel brakes are of the positive, mechanical type—acting quickly and surely. Both the Whippet Four and Whippet Six have considerably greater braking area than any of their competitors. Other important Whippet advantages include extra long wheelbase, oversize balloon tires, full force-feed lubrication, silent timing chain, "Finger-Tip Control," higher compression engine, invar-strut pistons, and, in the Six, a heavy sevenbearing crankshaft.
