TAWAS CITY—OMER GAME CALLED OFF LAST SUNDAY

Due to the non-arrival of the entire Omer team, the game between Tawas City and Omer scheduled for last Sunday was called off.

However, with the four Omer players present, and the donated services of five locals, Ed. Libka, Howard Swartz, Walter Kasischeke, Waldo Leslie and Maskey, the Tawas City squad and the made-ready team played a seven inning game. Laidlaw and Moeller formed the Tawas City battery, while opposing them were Libka and Swartz.

The contest proved to be an exciting one, the lead see-sawing from team to team, resulting in a final score of 5 to 4 in favor of Tawas City. The Tawas City boys, however, were out-hit by the so-called Omer team, seven hits to six. Both Moeller and Swartz were rather wild, each allowing five bases on balls. The fielding part of both teams was good, each having but two errors.

Next Sunday, July 21, Tawas City and the Saginaw Orioles will mix bats at the athletic field here. The Orioles are reputed to be a fast team, capable of putting up a good game. Game called at 3:00.

MAGICIAN IS STAR OF THE NEW COMEDY—"MR. REE"

SCENE FROM "MR. REE"—THREE ACT COMEDY

Many kinds of plays have been written. Melodramas, comedies, tragedies, mystery plays, have all had their followings. In the new three act magic-comedy "Mr. Ree," to be presented on the second night of the Chautauqua, we have a play that is in a different class than any of those mentioned. "Mr. Ree" combines the fun of the cleverest comedies with the thrills of the mystery plays and fine dramatic situations.

The scene of the play is in a small mid-western town, with a lapse of a period of two years between the action of the first and second acts. The story revolves about the fortunes of a young man who aspires to be a magician, and the fortunes of the family of a young girl with whom he is in love.

In the third act an instantaneous change in scenery and stage setting is made, and the action of the play is transferred to the Orient, where, within a beautiful and ornate Chinese chamber, four big illusions are created: The sawing in two of a woman—Levitation, in which the body of a woman is caused to rise from a table and float over the stage—a Chinese Torture Cabinet Mystery—and the Cremation of a woman.

This new play has all of the romance and interest of the most successful dramatic productions, and in addition, affords a vehicle for the presentation of one of the most elaborate performances of magic ever offered. The play was written for Eugene Frye, Master Magician, who has provided the illusions and magic routine throughout its three acts.

You are sure to regret it if you miss the second night of the Community Chautauqua.

LOWER ADMISSION PRICE FOR STATE THEATRE

The management of the State Theatre announced today that the admission for all talking and sound programs has been lowered to 15c and 35c. Except for a few of the most outstanding pictures this admission charge will be strictly adhered to. Mr. Ferguson feels that his theatre should be within the reach of every man, woman and child in the community and although the cost of operating has been tremendously increased with the new talking productions, the increased popularity of the theatre will offset the other.

Sound and talking attractions of the State for this week and next—Final showing today of Laura La Plante talking in "Scandal," also Collegians, all talking comedy, "The Rivals," Saturday, Sunday and Monday feature John Gilbert in a Metro sound sensation, "Desert Nights," also a movie-talking vaudeville act, Tuesday and Wednesday, no show, go to the Chautauqua. Thursday and Friday features William Haines talking in "The Duke Steps Out," also The Collegians, in another all talker.

14TH ANNUAL CHAUTAUQUA TO OPEN SUNDAY

Chautauqua patrons pledged to purchase 910 tickets for this year's program. Of that number many have not been taken because of removal or death. It thus becomes imperative that patrons take tickets for which they pledged. An obligation of over $1250.00 was assumed in securing the Chautauqua and the contract signers must get busy and see that the balance of the tickets are sold or a considerable deficit will have to be met.

The 14th Annual Iosco County Chautauqua will open at the Chautauqua grounds at eight o'clock Sunday evening with a musical variety program by Flesher's Musical Flashes. This is a novelty program of fun, unusual musical instruments, beautiful costumes and delightful personalities—a fine, enjoyable entertainment.

Ernest Torrence and Mary Nolan, hiding under the cloak of respectability as an English nobleman, and his daughter, assisted by three husky cohorts, make a clean job and escape with a fortune in uncut diamonds. To make sure of their safety they take John Gilbert, manager of the African mine, with them and set out to cross the treacherous desert.

It is a most interesting and gripping tale from the opening scene to the fade out for some of the most dramatic work of Gilbert's colorful career is to be seen in the later sequences in which the three are lost in the heart of an African desert. The true terrors of thirst are depicted realistically by these veteran artists.

STANDISH GAS STATION PROPRIETOR IS SHOT EARLY SUNDAY MORNING

Ignatz Zachadnik, 45, died at 5:00 o'clock Monday afternoon as a result of being shot in the abdomen by bandits Sunday morning who held him up at his home about five miles south of Standish on U. S. 23 near the Arenac-Bay county line. Sheriff John Donnelly of Arenac county and two State Police, Corporal Wright Needham and Trooper Carl Kimhaut of Bay City, are working on the case and arrested one man on suspicion. A second arrest is anticipated. The first man arrested has been released because of lack of evidence.

Zachadnik operated a gasoline station on U. S. 23 only a short distance from his home. Shortly before 2:30 o'clock Sunday morning he was aroused from his sleep by someone knocking at the door of his home. Upon inquiring who was there, the intruders asked him for some beer. Zachadnik replied that he had none, whereupon the men asked for some gasoline. The operator of the gasoline station arose from his bed and partially dressed and as he opened the door of his home one of the men on the outside fired a shot into the man's abdomen before he had a chance to say a word. The stricken man fell to the floor. The bandit made a demand for his money. The man's wife revealed the hiding place of the money as being under the victim's pillow on the bed. The intruders roughly pushed the woman aside, took the money and made a demand for "the rest of it." He went through the little home, using a flashlight as a guide. There was no other light in the house. He flashed the light in the eyes of the two children in the home and flourished a revolver. A second bandit discovered a tumbler with some change in it and emptied it into his pockets. He evidently knew where the money was kept as he asked no questions of its whereabouts. They took a total of about $75.00.

GEM ROBBERY THEME FOR THRILLING GILBERT FILM

One of the most sensational and daring hold-ups and gem robberies ever attempted is used as the basic theme of "Desert Nights," Metro-Holmes-Mayer's starring feature (sound synchronized) for John Gilbert, playing at the State Theatre, Saturday, Sunday and Monday.

Ernest Torrence and Mary Nolan, hiding under the cloak of respectability as an English nobleman, and his daughter, assisted by three husky cohorts, make a clean job and escape with a fortune in uncut diamonds. ### NEW YORK COMEDY SUCCESS CHAUTAUQUA MATINEE OFFERING

SCENE FROM "CIVILIAN CLOTHES"

If you like to laugh you will want to miss the three act comedy, "Civilian Clothes" which is to be presented on the fifth afternoon of the Chautauqua. This play by Thompson Buchanan was the greatest comedy hit of a New York theatrical season. It has to do with the love affair of a beautiful southern girl who met the "Captain" while she was doing Red Cross service over-seas, and with what she thought was her disillusionment when she saw him in civilian clothes—and later with her real disillusionment when—but we were telling too much of the story.

Here is a play with a different kind of a plot—a refreshing departure from the average comedy offered.

SUMMER GRID COACH

Bob Zuppke, for sixteen years a coach at the University of Illinois, is shown teaching Barkham Garner, a San Diego (Calif.) State college student how to "hit 'em low." Football is simple, Zuppke says, if players will only use their head, keeping it down, tackling low and turning their face in toward the knee. Zuppke gave a summer course on the sand of the Pacific at Coronado, Calif., where eighty California college boys learned something of the Illinois "system."

DAIRY FACTS

PROVED SIRE IS BIG DAIRY ASSET

Quality of His Get Cannot Be Told by Their Looks.

(By JAS. W. LINN, Extension Dairyman, K. S. A. C.)

The sire is half the herd! Besides feeding, there is nothing that determines the production of the herd or cow to as great an extent as breeding. In breeding it is important to have good cows, but regardless of how good or well bred one can only count on an average of one calf each year which will be the limit of the individual cow's influence on the future herd.

Such is not true of the sire. His influence in bettering or lowering the standards of the future herd is limited only by the number of cows to which he is mated.

The dairy bull has two disadvantages as compared with the beef herd sire in that the quality of his get cannot be told by their looks, and it is more difficult to keep an aged dairy bull.

If dairymen will realize that the older bulls may be kept in perfect safety by spending $100 or less on equipment, that the bull that has proved his worth is a sure way to build a better herd and that these bulls may often be bought at beef prices, or at least at reasonable prices, more of them will be used and better and more profitable herds will be the result.

It is necessary to list the daughters of these aged bulls to prove their worth. The Dairy Herd Improvement association is doing this in the best and most practical way, and hundreds of bulls will be proved in the next few years through this method.

Perhaps the one thing that is doing more to encourage the use of proved bulls than anything else is the use of the bull association where bulls are owned co-operatively and moved from one farm to the next. This is especially true where the members are members of the Dairy Herd Improvement association.

Absolutely Germ-Free Milk Is Impossibility

Clean milk should contain neither foreign matter nor bacteria of any kind. If milk could be obtained and stored, that was entirely free of bacteria, it would keep indefinitely. In view of the fact that absolutely germ-free milk is impossible to obtain under practical conditions, it is important to consider the ways and means of securing milk that is from healthy cows, free of foreign matter and which contains only a small amount of bacteria, none of which are disease-producing.

The tuberculin test is used as a means of eliminating cows that might pass tuberculosis germs through the milk. This test is prescribed by practically all city ordinances. In some cases cities require the cows to be tested or the milk pasteurized. Other cities insure a doubly safe product by requiring all the milk to come from tuberculin tested cows, whether it is pasteurized or not.

Visible dirt in the milk is not only a source of danger, but it indicates carelessness in handling. Usually such milk contains a large number of bacteria.

Dairy Hints

A balanced ration for the cow will help balance the bank account.

Give the cows all the hay they will clean up reasonably well, legumes preferred.

Fifty tons of roots will replace about four and one-half tons of grain in feeding dairy cattle.

Get acquainted with your milking machine. It may be able to explain how the milk can be better.

The feed saved by culling out one low-producing cow will pay the cost of testing an entire dairy herd for a year.

The chief reason why a cow does not starve to death on pasture alone is because the summer season is too short.

Give a calf the right start. Heifers cost too much to raise to waste time on poor ones. A good heifer poorly developed is not a good investment, either.

Grow a legume to reduce feeding costs. Underfeeding dairy cows is like riding a merry-go-round; you never get anywhere.

Don't stunt the dairy calf. A cow must have constitution to make a good producer, and a stunted calf never made a big frame.

Many feeding experiments have fully demonstrated that the percentage of cream in milk is not materially altered either by the amount or quality of feed.

Town Names

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON
Drawing by Ray Walters.

ALTHOUGH the motorist, whom the artist has pictured above, may feel a bit like Christopher Columbus, you probably will look in vain for Lindy, Neb., on your map. For like its famous namesake, it soared into fame overnight and that was so recently that it's doubtful if the mapmakers have yet got around to putting a little dot on the space occupied by the Cornhusker state and lettering in the word "Lindy." But if you will start out from the town of Bloomfield, Neb., and travel 14 miles northwest, you'll discover a busy little place of more than 100 inhabitants with dozens of bungalows along its streets, a Methodist church (used by two other denominations), two general stores, two cream and produce stations, an implement store, a blacksmith shop, a restaurant, a confectioner's store, a filling station, a barber shop and beauty parlor, a paint shop, a pool hall, a variety store and a telephone exchange. (That is, it had all these when this article was written, but if its motto, like that of many other towns is "Watch Lindy Grow!" all this data may be sadly out of date by the time you read it.)

For Lindy was founded as a town early last year when four farmers bought the townsite on Howe creek, sold 40 lots at auction and a miniature boom resulted. For some time the people of that vicinity had needed a trading center. Four years ago an attempt was made to found a town there but crop failures interfered and nothing was accomplished. Then the four farmers got busy and the result—the latest great American hero has the latest addition to Nebraska's municipalities named after him (and the "eternal fitness of things" demands that another town should spring up near by and that eventually there be "twin cities" of "Lindy" and "Ann")!

But just because you won't find Lindy, Neb., on your map, don't think that the other towns named on the billboard in the picture above are fictitious. For there is a Muleshoe, Texas, and there will continue to be one if a famous Texas editor wins his fight. He is Gene Howe of the Amarillo (Texas) Globe, son of the famous Ed Howe of the Atchison (Kan.) Globe. Some of the residents of Muleshoe have started a movement to change the town's name to Rosborough because it "sounds prettier." But Editor Howe believes in preserving "local color" and since Muleshoe is named for the Muleshoe ranch, famous in the days when cattle was king in Texas, he has been conducting a strenuous editorial campaign to save its honored and historic name. There's only one Muleshoe in the world, say those who believe as he does and there's already a Rosborough, N. C., not to mention any number of Rosebuds, Roseburgs, Rosebushes, Rose Centers, Rose Creeks, Rosedales, Rosefields, Roseglens, Rose Hills, Roselands, Rosemounts and Rosewells.

An Ancient Mystery

One of the oldest representations of an insect in art has come to light in the archeologically famous cave of the Three Brothers in the commune of Montespoulet-Avantes, France. It is a grasshopper crudely carved out of a bit of ancient bison bone now in the possession of Comte Begouen, father of the three youths who first discovered the cave of prehistoric wonders, and for whom it is named

GRAY FOR AGE; COLORS FOR YOUTH

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

DOCTOR ANTHONY MOROW turned over in his bed that June morning and looked at the clock. Just 7:30. He could hear the rattle of dishes in the kitchen below. Myra always arose early and sharply at eight she would come to the foot of the stairs and call—just as she had called every morning for the past several years—

"An-tho-nee. . . breakfast is on the table. . . An-tho-nee!"

The sun was streaming across the gray rug like a golden shaft and a gentle breeze ruffled the soft mill curtains. It was a day for youth. . . for bright colors. . . laughter. . . beauty. He looked up toward the ceiling and closed his eyes with a groan. Gray! Gray everywhere! Even the furniture and the rug were gray! Dull—drab! Gray was a color for old folks. . . Doctor Morow sat up and looked in the mirror of the gray enameled dresser. Slightly bald, round, rosy cheeked. . . not so bad for fifty-six. He wasn't ready for gray yet! Myra was seemingly quite content to settle down in the bungalow on the edge of town with sewing and church duties—and gray room, but not him! He would move his belongings to the room at the end of the hall and make a real man's room of it. He jumped out of bed and while the water ran in his bath he stood before the open window and did the daily dozen, the last four not so spry as the first four. He shivered as the ice spray struck his back—but that would bring back the vitality! Cold showers—exercise—youth!

He even touched Myra's powder puff to his round face after shaving and dressed carefully. Doctor Morow was particular about his clothes and this morning he chose an unusually colorful tie—one his niece Ethelwyn had sent from Hollywood at Christmas saying they were all the "rage," a background of old blue with dashes of orange. He view the effect with satisfaction.

"Not bad—for fifty-six—many years to go yet. . . breakfast is on the table. . . An-tho-nee!"

In his office, sharply at nine, he donned his long white linen coat and looked through his appointment book. His office girl was on her vacation. The list of patients was small. Rosamonde Leahy at 9:30. There was—a girl! Nice little thing—lots of pep and a classy little dresser. Drove a green roadster; just recently come to Fairmont; whispered around she had been on the stage; old Mr. Lawrence at 10:45 and Mrs. Dibble, city librarian, on her noon hour; then, little Jackie Adams at 3:30, after school.

Miss Leahy came in promptly at 9:30, dressed in an orange colored knit suit, a tight-fitting white hat and white golf shoes.

"Oh, Doctor Morow, what a stunning tie! Look! It just matches my sport dress, doesn't it? Nearly canceled my appointment. Would you have been sorry? I'm going out to play golf—all by my little lonely this morning—need the practice, and I knew if that nasty old drill of yours hurt me it would just spoil my day. You won't hurt me now will you, Doctor Morow. . ."

Doctor Morow carefully adjusted a towel about his patient's chin and smiled down at her. "Hurt you? Hurt such a little ray of sunshine as you? You look just like a summer rose in bloom, all color and loveliness. Now open wide and maybe, maybe . . . if you are so lonely this morning, all by your lonesome, what do you think of me when the ray of sunshine leaves this gloomy old office all dark and we just won't use the old drill today."

"I just dread going out there all alone," she said petulantly as she adjusted her hat over her carefully marcelled hair and patted her already overpowered nose with feathery puff.

"I get so lonesome. . ."

"TL lonesome right now, and for two cents I'd go to . . ."

Miss Leahy opened her purse and as she placed two copper pennies in his outstretched palm his fingers closed over hers and he reached for the telephone to cancel his other appointments. Color! Youth! No grays or drabs about Rosamonde. They stopped and bought some golf shoes, and further on they purchased a set of clubs. Next week he would have his tailor measure him for a golf suit. A sporty looking tweed—tan or brown—anything but gray! Gray was meant for age. Colors for youth.

Doctor Morow prepared to drive from the first tee with gusto. It looked easy, but he dug into the ground behind his ball and Rosamonde took his club and instructed him how to hold it and to swing clear through. By noon they were in the sand bunker between the third and fourth holes. His new shoes were tight and felt like lead. One o'clock found them trying to rescue his last ball from the creek that flowed between the sixth and seventh holes. Three o'clock found them on the ninth green. Rosamonde was by this time calling him "Tony," and as they walked toward the clubhouse she slipped her hand through his arm.

"We'll have just a bit to eat in the grill and then we'll have a delicious lunch drive before dinner to the Green Lantern. My 'gang' will be there—good music and everything."

ed frightfully and his collar, which had been so white and fresh when Myra had announced that breakfast was on the table, was sadly wilted and chafed the back of his neck. He was too tired to undress for a shower; too tired to eat. He called Myra that he would not be home for dinner—out with friends—and then followed Rosamonde to the green roadster. The golf bags—he carried both—weighed a ton. He had slipped his shoes off under the luncheon table and exposed the blistered heels to the cooling air. The shoes were now tighter than ever.

The drive revived him, although his head continued to ache badly. The sun had been very hot on the links. He dozed once or twice . . . dead tired, but Rosamonde would not allow him to sleep long. Her gay chatter did not diminish. By the time they were headed back down a shady road toward the Green Lantern in the early twilight he felt so much better he placed his fat white hand over the smaller one at the wheel. Nice girl—but that orange-colored dress was—rather flashy.

Dozens of cars were parked around the roadhouse and music floated out into the air. As they entered Rosamonde turned to him expectantly. It was a waltz, and Doctor Morow could waltz. He had always waltzed. He began to perspire again; his neck was raw and his feet were crying out in revolt. Rosamonde conducted him to the table at which her friends were seated, and he danced again—twice—then he reeled out of a door that opened upon the veranda overlooking the entrance. He carefully lowered himself into a chair, his bones creaking when he moved. With his handkerchief he fanned his sore neck and was just removing his second shoe when a taxi turned into the driveway. The passengers alighted with considerable laughter and merriment. Then as the car backed up and started to turn around, Doctor Morow came to his feet.

"Wait! Taxi! I'm coming! And if you go off and leave me I'll shoot you. Wait!"

He delivered a message to a waiter together with a liberal tip; got his hat from the check girl, and with his shoes in one hand, the other pressed firmly against his aching back, he painfully left the Green Lantern and climbed into the taxi.

Myra was reading in the living room and answered his greeting as he hurried upstairs. He took a warm bath, opened the blisters on his heels and applied a healing lotion, creamed his sunburned neck, and then groaning wearily, he crawled into the cool sheets of the gray enameled bed.

"My dear," he said softly, as Myra came into the room, "this is—a sweet home. And this particular chamber such good taste for middle-aged folks like us. Gray is so soft, so soothing, so restful. . ."

Commercial Use Found for All Waste Product

Herring and sardine tinning factories have reached the stage where practically there is no waste and all by-products are utilized. The scales of the silvery herring, which were once nothing but a nuisance, now bring in hundreds of thousands of dollars to the pearl essence manufacturers. These scales possess beautiful iridescence when affixed to a sphere or rounded surface. When laid flat, however, they lack the pearly luster. Then there are the heads, tails and other waste products that formerly were loaded on scows, taken far out to sea and dumped, or else destroyed in incinerators, or to a limited extent used as a field fertilizer. Now the increasing numbers of fish-meal plants quickly convert them into nutritious and cheap poultry food. The waste oils from the overflowing tins are all caught and used in the production of varnish and paints. Even the bright tin trimmings from the cans are saved. Compressed into big bales, they are shipped to England, there defatted, smelted and processed over into new sheets of metal.

Jonah Story on Jug

An independent version of the story of Jonah and the whale, probably current in ancient Greece long before the Hebrew Bible was written, is believed to be depicted on a decorated pottery jug found in the former Greek island of Cyprus and recently acquired by the British museum.

The scene painted on the jug, probably at least 25 centuries ago, shows a ship from which a sailor is falling or being thrown into the waves. Awaiting him in the water is a great fish, apparently ready to swallow him.

The jug shows evidence, according to the museum authorities, of having been made by some potter of ancient Cyprus, who was influenced by the Phoenician sailors and traders, then numerous in the Mediterranean.—Detroit News.

Rosenthal's Sly Dig

Rosenthal, the famous pianist and composer, who is well known for his wit, was once invited to a musical evening at a friend's house, where at the same time a pianist was invited who should play the very short so-called "Minute Waltz" of Chopin, the best-known arrangement of which is by Rosenthal himself. The pianist, however, played the work far too slowly, and one could see Rosenthal frowning. After the piece was over, however, Rosenthal got up, went to the player, and thanked him most heartily, saying in a genial way: "This Minute waltz, my dear sir, as I have heard it tonight, has provided me with a most delightful quarter of an hour."

SUMMER HATS IN VARIED MOOD; TYPICAL DINE AND DANCE FROCK

Some of the Summer Hats.

MILLINERS are gradually growing more liberal-minded in regard to the use of trimming on midday's chapeau. Note the word "gradually" for it is a slow process, this of reviving interest in trimmed millinery. After the despotic and long-continued reign of the "tricky" little untrimmed felt, it is bound to take time for women to come out from under its sway.

Among midsummer collections there is considerable reaction of the "eternal feminine" to the call of lace, ribbon and flower adornment. Especially is lace lending its enchantment to current hat fashions. Considering that this is a "lace season" it could not be otherwise that creators of the hat-beautiful should incorporate lace in to its making.

In many instances so adroitly does the modiste introduce lace, it becomes a very part of the hat rather than giving the appearance of applied trimming. One sees this to a fascinating degree in colored felts which have insets of matching lace worked into the very structure of the shape. One very charming method is to form the long side of the felt brim of stiffened lace, after the manner of the modish hat shown centered to the right in the picture. The original model photographed here happens to be black, but the idea is just as often carried out in beige, or grayish green, porcelain blue, or any of the newer shades.

Thin, filmy mesh stretched over smooth straws or felts is another favored lace treatment. The exotic linenlike straws such as bakou and ballbunt make an inviting background for lace thus manipulated. Sometimes the lace is drawn taut all over the top of the hat, or perhaps just the crown is covered, or the brim. Often the brim of a large picture shape is lined with lace. A beheading use of fine black lace is made in the instance of the natural bangkok bonnet color enchantment its chief asset, cleverly tells the story in brief of the typical dine and dance frock as it registers on the summer program. Perhaps it is the very simplicity of frocks such as this which has captured the heart of fashion's clientele. At any rate, no modern, young or young-upon-it can boast of a perfectly appointed wardrobe, unless just such a frock as here pictured is included in her dress collection.

The tone-and-tint role played by these utterly feminine frocks is endless. One simply decides on her favorite color—the one most becoming, and there's no doubt about finding the chiffon or georgette in the wanted shade.

An idea which is being followed by certain color enthusiasts is the matching of one's chiffon frock to the color of one's eyes. Try it. In the fabric field there are chiffons to match eyes or hazel brown, and brown is wonderfully chic this season. The color card is largely given over to ravishing blues, prominent among which are the very light blues which Paris acclaims for evening wear. Midday fair, whose eyes are blue, will find that the new and lovely blues will prove a happy choice for her next chiffon party dress.

A color especially highlighted for boudoir, beach and sports clothes, also ultra formal attire, is yellow. Maize illustrated to the left center of this group in the upper picture. Sprightly ribbon bows for hats of more or less tailored aspect give an air of piquancy to any number of the newer felt and straw modes. The cloche with a cluster of loops and bands as shown on the model below to the left is a favorite type among those who sponsor ribbon trims.

Much is being said in favor of the long-side off-the-face styles. Completing the group in the picture you see one of these very recent silhouettes. Its charm accentuated by a perky bow placed just over the left eye.

Multicolored grosgrain ribbon trims the wee cloche at the top. Sheer, sleeveless and bonneted, with to pumpkin yellow and allied shades of chartreuse, lime and citron are everywhere in the summer landscape. Quite the newest color note for chiffon gown is smoke gray.

The styling of the dress pictured is typical of the general trend for chiffons—a few flounces placed low on a bodice which suggests the new princess lines. The latest maneuver of hemlines is to dip almost with the effect of a short train at the back, as does the one in the picture. No sleeves, of course, for that sleevelessness is confined to evening mode, for without sleeves is the message for every hour from morning to midnight.

"Much of the local color of the nation would be lost," says an editorial in a recent issue of the Kansas City Star, commenting upon the Howe crusade, "if there should be a concerted effort to change such names as Jamboree, Ky.; Jelly, Calif.; Rocky Comfort, Mo.; Nowata, Okla.; No. Wood, Wyo.; Beehive, Mont.; Horse Haven, Wash.; Papoose, Okla.; and Rough and Ready, Calif. So you see the artist who drew the picture above knew what he was about and there really is a Rough and Ready, Calif. and a Jamboree, Ky. There's a T. B., Maryland, too. And thereby hangs a tale.

T. B. is a small village in the southern part of Prince Georges county in Maryland. But just because T. B. is the slang abbreviation for tuberculosis, don't think that there's a sanitarium there. The letters composing the name are the initials of Thomas Brooke, who acquired several thousand acres of land in that neighborhood in colonial days. There is a tradition that when a village grew up one of the original Brooke boundary stones was found within the limits of the village. This stone bore the initials of Thomas Brooke and from the circumstance the inhabitants fell into the habit of calling their village T. B.

Punkin Center was the name of a fictitious town wherein lived a fictitious character named Uncle Josh Weatherly, made famous on the phonograph by Cal Stewart a few years back. But there really is a Punkin (and it isn't Pmpkin, either) Center. It's ten miles east of Hutchinson, Kan., on U. S. highway No. 50-S and it got in the news a few months ago when some escaped prisoners from the state reformatory were captured there. And there's a Hicksville on Long Island in New York, too.

Kansas not only has a real Punkin Center, but it also has the smallest town in the world with the biggest name. Jumbo, Kan., is in Gray county, about midway between Cimarron and Fowler, and its population is 5! But another state has that record beat. For three families own all of America—America, Ind.

The hamlet of America in Liberty township, Wabash county, once was a boom town, being on the direct route from towns south to Wabash, Ind., through which grain, en route to the Wabash and Erie canal at Lagro, was handled. In 1850 a plank road was built from Marion to Lagro and the town of America, halfway between the two places, saw an unusual growth. In 1890 the Cincinnati, Wabash & Michigan railroad (now the Big Four) was built, but missed America and passed through the town of Lafontaine. Now the lots in the once thriving town are used for farm purposes and only a tumble-down building remains. The total assessed valuation is $1,075.

Recently the Houston (Texas) Post-Dispatch, in commenting upon the fact that a highly entertaining book could be written on the names of Texas towns, said:

For instance, Bug Scuffle, a little community so near the Red river, probably was not inspired by any physical conflict of insects. The name of this community has been changed to Bath, but the folks still call it Bug Scuffle, and "Bug" for short. Possum Walk, in Walker county, may have come by its name honestly, as likewise Hogstown, in the Ranger oil field, whose name was changed from the ridiculous to the sublime—Desdemona—but to little avail.

Other places are named for structures, as Bee House and Board House. Money, the root of all evil, is the basis of several community names. Gonzales has its Cheapside, but on the other hand Hunt county has Cash, Live Oak county has Dinero, and Lee county is saving up with a Dime Box. Energy is a snappy town in central Texas. Fort Spunky is a brave one, Gray Hill and Happy are carefree.

There's a hint of romance in Lovelady, one of sternness in Necessity, and one of patriotism in Old Glory. A town in Travis county is named Mud, but hopes are bright in Rising Star. Eastland county knows its Okra, and prohibits its towns from being named as long as it has its Ryra.

Sassapoco is a contraction of "Smith Asphalt Manufacturing Company," or something of that sort. Smithville is not the home of the Smith brothers, but Sugar Land is the home of sugar. Sabine county enjoys a good Time, Veribest claims to surpass all other towns; Austin county extends a Welcome to the world and Zephyr is a breezy little place in Brown county.

But the Western states aren't the only ones which have queer names for their towns. A short time ago the New York Times printed an article about the odd names of towns in New Jersey whereupon a loyal Jerseyman wrote as follows:

May I take the liberty to say that our towns have no more peculiar names than some of those in New York state?

For instance, in northeastern New York is a little village called Alpas. Eastern New York has Bliss, while western New York has Joy and Friendship.

The old proverb "More haste, less speed," seems to have been reversed, for New York has Ushers, Speedsville, Rushville and Gallupville. Every New Yorker must speak the truth because I see Sayville and Truthville.

Up in Wayne county there is a place called Lock Berlin, where they present visitors with the key to the city and then change the lock. An automobile trip from New York to Buffalo by numerous back roads would take one to many strange places. After crossing Golden Bridge in Westchester county, one would pass through Oregon, Stormville, Salt Point, Silver Nails, Blue Stores, Athens, Halfmoon, Damascus, Killowag, Dundee, Italy, Naples, Piffard, Wyoming and Wales. One might return via Holland, Java, Cuba and Cairo.

It must be admitted that New Yorkers are patriotic. There is Union, Freedom, Victory, Eagle, Columbia and Liberty.

Such odd names as Steamburg, Painted Post, Fly Creek, Burnt Hills, Modeltown, Owl's Head, Horseheads and Hunters Land grace some of the quaint little villages throughout the state.

It was William Shakespeare who once said "What's in a name?"

Surgeon: I feel duty bound to tell you that four out of five patients die under this operation. Now is there anything you like for me to do before I begin?

Colored Gent: Yas suh, kindly hand me mah hat.

Now is the time to use Hexite dairy feed — keep your cows in good condition and get a full pail of milk. If you do not feed your cows good you can't expect results.

Daughter: Father I won't need any clothes this summer.

Father: Ye gods! I was afraid that it would come to that!

Just received a car of corn. We have plenty of corn meal, cracked corn and scratch feed on hand at the present time.

What kind of a dress did Betty wear to the party last night?

I don't remember but I think it was checked.

That must have been a real patry.

Mrs. Jones: Do your daughters live at home?

Mrs. Smith: Oh, no! They aren't married yet.

Do you remember when we first met in the revolving door at the post office?

That wasn't the first time we met. Well, that is when we began going around together

The common cause of digestive difficulties is excess acid. Soda cannot alter this condition, and it burns the stomach.

One spoonful of this delightful preparation can neutralize many times its volume in acid. It acts instantly; relief is quick, and very apparent.

Jungle Hunt in Motor Car

New York.—Mr. and Mrs. Prentiss Gray of Larchmont and Wilfred W. Brown, ornithologist of the Academy of Natural Science of Philadelphia have left for Africa on an automotive expedition.

Throughout the several thousand miles of the journey Mrs. Gray will drive a three-quarter ton truck, equipped with a special all steel body, as a blind for taking night pictures.

The car is so arranged that Mr. Gray can stand in it and operate two still cameras and two moving picture cameras mounted on the roof and reached through a trap door.

the land, a large antelope of Africa. Upon arrival at Mombasa the party will be met by Philip Percival, who has organized a group of fifty porters, gun carriers, and native hunters.

Among the specimens in which the museum is particularly interested are a variety of rare deer from eastern Angola and Rhodesia. They include Selous' Sitatunga, the Lechui water buck, Lichtenstein's hartebeest, and the Nakong or Speke's bushbuck.

The overland trip, in which Mrs. Gray will drive most of the way, will take them from Mombasa up through Nairobi, then to southern Tanganyika, across Lake Tanganyika to Elizabethville and Kivu, in the Belgian Congo, thence to Angola in Portuguese West Africa.

During and after the World War Mr. Gray was assistant director of the commission for relief of Belgium and assistant director of marine transportation of the food administration under Herbert Hoover.

In 1917 Mr. Gray was the last American to leave Brussels. He remained for a month after Brand Whitlock, American minister, had left the city, to turn over affairs of Belgian relief to the Dutch and Spanish ministers.

Returning, the party plans to retrace its steps across the Belgian Congo to the head waters of the Nile and make its way down that river to Khartoum and Cairo, or will embark on a steamer at Lobetia bay on the coast of Portuguese West Africa for London and New York.

"Gas" Smugglers Make Trouble

Lincoln, Neb.—For the first time in history, Nebraska will be faced shortly with a "custom" problem, a problem which may make necessary the guarding or patrolling of two of her boundary lines.

The reason is that the lucrative practice of smuggling gasoline across from Kansas and Iowa has begun with the four cent gasoline tax law, according to Dr. T. W. Bass, collector of the gas tax here.

While the Nebraska gasoline tax was two cents a gallon, Doctor Bass said, there was no smuggling trouble, because the rate was either the same, or higher in the bordering states.

"But we have already received several reports of smuggling on the Kansas line, and also across the river from Iowa," Doctor Bass said. "It seems likely that the problem will have to be met by putting a man or men in the field to patrol the borders and to intercept the smugglers."

"There is a good profit in it for them. We hear that they are hauling gasoline in from Kansas, failing to report the purchase in that state, and selling it here at four cents a gallon above the normal retail price. They pay no tax in Kansas and get the benefit of the tax here, they cheat both states and make a handsome profit."

REARRANGING THE FURNITURE

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

It is said of Thackeray, I believe, that when in his novels he once got his characters cast and definitely outlined, they seemed to get away from him, to determine their own behavior and procedure, and, no matter how much he tried to manage them, they seemed to have wills of their own and a destiny to work out in spite of all the author's attempts to make them behave toward each other as he would have liked to have them.

I have sometimes felt that our furniture had something of these same human characteristics, and that when the various pieces were once settled in their respective corners of the house, no matter how determined we might be at times to bring about a rearrangement, the chairs and the tables and the settees, managed in a short time to drift back again each into its own familiar corner, as if they knew by a sort of wooden intuition the most appropriate place for each particular piece.

When Nancy and I first settled down to housekeeping we had few rooms to be furnished, and only the minimum amount of furniture to place in them.

We lived along for two or three months with things as they were, and then one evening Nancy was to be out for two or three hours, and I determined upon a re-arrangement. Everything was to be changed, including the window curtains and the pictures on the wall. One of the fellows agreed to help me and we worked fast. Before Nancy got home the metamorphosis had been wrought. She was a little dazed when she first came in and looked around, and then together we looked the change over. I tried to think it was better, but it really wouldn't do at all. There wasn't a piece of furniture that wasn't lonesome for its old corner. The pieces stood out stiff and uncomfortable. There didn't seem to be an old friend anywhere. We couldn't stand the change a half-hour, so we set to work, before we even went to bed, and moved everything back into its old place.

Adaptability to new work and new conditions is too infrequently found in people. Like the furniture, we look awkward and out of place when we are moved to a new position. Having once found a corner or a convenient wall space into which we seem to fit, it is often the wisest plan to stay there and to make the best of our position. The main thing is to find the proper corner, and then to let the furniture stay where it is put.

"Time Temple" for Capital

Washington.—The Horological Institute of America announced at its annual meeting in the National Academy of Sciences building that plans are under consideration to erect in Washington a $1,000,000 "Time Temple." The building would become the national educational center for the science of horology, and would contain a great horological library and masterpieces of the watchmaker's craft.

A nucleus for the exhibit in the proposed time building is now being shown, comprising the collection of 30 watches, valued at $30,000, from the estate of the late James Ward Packard, automotive engineer and inventor. These watches represent masterpieces of the watchmaker's art. Several of the watches are 53-jeweled, and all represent the finest achievements in the manufacture of accurate and complicated timepieces. An astronomical watch of extraordinary intricacy, valued at $7,000, keeps track of the seconds, tells the day, the week, month and year, the mean solar time and the apparent solar time, and the time of sunrise and sunset each day.

The watch adjusts itself automatically at the end of each month, making the correct change of 28, 30 or 31 days, as may be required, and automatically adding a day for leap year. In the back of the watch is a miniature sky dotted with gold stars. The mechanism of the works is so fine that these stars change with each season. The institute has started a survey to determine the feasibility of securing funds for a building and for an endowment to support a larger and more active institute which now functions as a member of the national research council. A campaign to arouse public interest and to secure new members along with an endowment is one of the objectives of the institute.

OLD FOLKS SAY DR. CALDWELL WAS RIGHT

The basis of treating sickness has not changed since Dr. Caldwell left Medical College in 1875, nor since he placed on the market the laxative prescription he had used in his practice.

He treated constipation, biliousness, headaches, mental depression, indigestion, sour stomach and other indispositions entirely by means of simple vegetable laxatives, herbs and roots. These are still the basis of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, a combination of senna and other mild herbs, with pepsin.

The simpler the remedy for constipation, the safer for the child and for you. And as you can get results in a mild and safe way by using Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, why take chances with strong drugs?

A bottle will last several months, and all can use it. It is pleasant to the taste, gentle in action, and free from narcotics. Elderly people find it ideal. All drug stores have the generous bottles, or write "Syrup Pepsin," Dept. BB, Monticello, Illinois, for free trial bottles.

Lengthened nights shorten days.

Are You Ready

When your Children Cry for It

Baby has little upsets at times. All your care cannot prevent them. But you can be prepared. Then you can do what any experienced nurse would do—what most physicians would tell you to do—give a few drops of plain Castoria. No sooner done than Baby is soothed; relief is just a matter of moments. Yet you have eased your child without use of a single doubtful drug; Castoria is vegetable. So it's safe to use as often as an infant has any little pain you cannot pat away. And it's always ready for the crueler pangs of colic, or constipation or diarrhea; effective, too, for older children. Twenty-five million bottles were bought last year.

What the Gray House Hid

THE STORY
Hilton Hanby has purchased a country place—the Gray house, near Pine Plains, Miss Selenos, a former tenant, warns him that the house is under a curse. Further alarming details are impressed upon Adolf Smucker, Hanby's secretary, by a man who claims to have been chauffeur for Sir Stamford Seymour, former occupant of the place. The Hanbys laugh off the warnings. But they are shocked when they hear that the caretaker of the Gray house, a man named Kerr, has been mysteriously murdered. Hanby consults his friend Pelham. The family starts for the new home. Appleton, a clerk of Douglas and Smith, the agents from whom Hanby bought the Gray house, urges Pelham to dissuade Hanby from occupying the Gray house. Pelham becomes a member of the household. A phone call from a man who declares he is an old acquaintance of Hanby's, urges him to preserve a part of the grounds as a bird sanctuary. The Hanbys take possession of the Gray house. A stranger introducing himself as Frederick Appleton, calls at the Gray house and is welcomed because of his interest in bird life. Hanby engages Appleton as his agent. The Selenos mystery is explained. Smucker, out of a job because of the loss of his position with Hanby, becomes embittered against him as the author of his misfortunes, and plans revenge.

He turned away and made for the bird sanctuary. The wire netting about it he climbed nimbly, and then unheeding thorns and brambles, he crept like the hunted thing he was to its black center. Suddenly he stepped into nothingness. He felt himself falling. Then came a blow and he was no more aware of time and space.

When Tim Hanby, intent on adding a white owl to his collection, had carefully aimed his twenty-two at the creature as it sat on an elm branch, he had not been prepared for the extraordinary intervention that saved his life. As his finger caressed the trigger, there came a bloodcurdling scream, and some large animal had sprung from the base of the tree. Tim felt that it was no disgrace to flee immediately.

Hanby had not been near his office for two months. An hour's dictation cleared up his correspondence, and he went to the Hardware club for luncheon.

"Hello, Douglas!" he said, stopping at the table where an elderly, gray-haired man was sitting. "I called you up this morning, but you were busy."

"Glad to see you," Douglas replied heartily. "I've missed you. What's it like to be a landed proprietor?"

"The best life in the world," Hanby declared. "but a darned sight more to do than I thought. Why did you recommend me to buy those farms?"

"A sound investment. They'll be wanted for a country club some day. How are your improvements coming along?"

"They are finished, thanks to your admirable Appleton. Douglas, how could you let a fellow of a man like that go?"

There was a curious smile on the heavily lined face of the real estate man.

"So Appleton has been up there again, has he?" inquired Douglas.

"Again? What do you mean?"

"The Gray house holds some singular fascination for him—that's what I mean. You ask why I let him go. You call him a jewel. I did that for more than thirty years."

"And yet you refused to raise his pay, and stuck some lackanapes over him. I thought you were a better business man than that."

"Tell me just what he said," Douglas returned.

He listened to Hanby in silence.

"Now hear me," he resumed. "I fired Appleton. I didn't refuse to raise his pay, and I put nobody over him."

"You fired Appleton? Douglas, you must have been crazy! What for?"

"Ostensibly because he was drunk and impertinent."

"Appleton? Why, he never drinks!"

"Another reason was because he had deliberately misled me as to his family life. Yet a third was because he had manipulated accounts. I don't mean that he took money from me. I mean that he had robbed Perer to pay Paul. I mean specifically that for years he had been charging other clients for the money he used to effect repairs on the Gray house."

"On my house?"

Douglas nodded.

"For years he has been interested in your house—for the last ten years, anyway. Another thing—Southard called me up a month or so ago, to ask why I allowed a man like you, with a lovely family, to buy a house where people died from bad drains. For the last few years Appleton has kept clients from buying that house. You ask why. I can't explain. Ask Appleton. I did, and was told to go to h—!"

"The Appleton I mean is a man of sixty, plump, smiling, and married to an invalid to whom he is devoted. He calls himself Darby and his wife Joan."

"That's my Appleton, too. I took it upon myself to see her. There was another illusion gone. She is an invalid, but as to being devoted, he tells her openly he wishes she were dead, so that he could marry the younger woman he runs around with."

Hanby put his hands to his head.

"This is too much!" he murmured. "Remember, I had him in my house for a month."

"I had him for more than thirty years. Up to the time he met this musical comedy person—she must be forty now—he was a good husband. Now he takes the woman out to dance halls. He has money saved, but he's spending it. I have never been so utterly deceived in any one. His wife, who is religious, thinks he's possessed of a devil, and maybe she's right. She says he has any amount of money. I had his books examined, and he hasn't embezzled one cent. All he has done is to divert money from other houses to the upkeep and repair of the one you're in. You've no kick coming. He saved you money. What was he doing for you?"

Hanby explained. He told Douglas what his improvements had been, their cost, and the time in which they were executed. The real-estate man made calculations on the back of a menu card. Fortunately Hanby had exact particulars as to dimensions.

"Here's another puzzle!" said Douglas. "To complete the work in that time he must have worked many more men than you paid for. I know prices and labor scales in New York state. It amounts to this—he went up to you to get the very job you pressed on him. Why? Search me. Hanby—search me! Another thing—he must have paid for extra workmen out of his own pocket, so that he could get the work done by a certain time. Again you may search me!"

Hanby frowned.

"He may have wanted the workmen off the premises for some purpose of his own."

"What purpose?" Douglas asked.

"How should I know? By the way did you ever deny permission to a former tenant, a Miss Selenos, to go back and dig something up from the garden?"

"I denied her right to do some excavation. Appleton told me she was a maniac who wanted to bomb the place. I turned it over to him. Anything in what he said?"

Hanby told him of the affair of Miss Selenos and her pets.

"I don't mind admitting that Appleton has destroyed a lot of my faith in mankind," Douglas said presently.

"He was the one man I would have wagered my soul on as being square and white."

"Ever see the woman?"

"That was how it all came out. I ran out of gas near Mineola, and had to go to a very third-rate roadhouse. There was Appleton, in a neat tuxedo, doing fancy steps with a good looking ex-actress. I looked at him very hard. I couldn't believe it was he." Douglas laughed a little. "He had the d—d insolence to say that if I annoyed his lady friend by making baby eyes at her, he'd knock my block off. Next morning he didn't try to make excuses. He had a hangover, and he told me much of what he had concealed since 1890 or thereabouts. It appeared that he had always hated me and envied me my good luck." Douglas grew almost irritable. "No more about Appleton, or I'll change my table!"

Hanby did not get back to the Gray house until late. He said a few words to the younger people and then asked Dina and Bill to come to the library.

"I've had a great day," he announced. "Incidentally I have discovered that my judgment of character is no better, let's say, than Bill's."

"And me a house detective!" Bill cried. "Your reason totters!"

"We've all been deceived but Les."

"Les?" cried Dina. "Oh, Bill, you're joking! That boy?"

"Dina, light of my life," said Hanby, "if there is a more thoroughgoing old hollon than Mr. Frederick Darby Pickwick Appleton, let me learn his dishonored name. I've seen his Joan this afternoon, and I know what I'm talking about. Listen! I'll begin with what Douglas told me and then come to my interview with that poor crippled old woman."

"It seems impossible!" commented Dina, at the end of her husband's narrative.

"I begin to suspect myself," Bill murmured. "Appleton!"

"It took me that way when I first heard it, but it cannot be doubted. He came here to get the opportunity to be in and near this house, and to see what was going on. He has always been coming and going. I've heard something that may bear on it a little. I got it from Mrs. Appleton. Her brother was a very rich man but he speculated and died in poverty. There were a few years when it looked as if she was going to be his heiress; and Appleton was going to use the legacy to buy the Gray house and make it a fashionable roadhouse. He said there was a fortune in it. Fishing, golf, swimming—everything that was needed for a residential hotel. Perhaps 'roadhouse' isn't just what he meant, but that was Mrs. Appleton's term."

"But if her brother died in poverty, where would he get the money to buy this place?" Bill asked.

"I don't know. I admit that it doesn't solve the question why he should still be interested in it. There is no solution, as far as I see, and yet we know that something is going on here, or something is planned to go on, and that we stand in the way and they want to remove us. I wonder if we ought to consult the police!"

"And get all kinds of notoriety! Oh, Hil, don't think of it! Nothing has happened—not even a tramp!"

"D—n it," said Hanby, "I'm a simple type. If I like people, I trust them absolutely. I go the limit for them, and they can have everything I've got. This gives me pause—whatever that means." He put his hand on his wife's arm. "Come and dance with me, Delilah, ere I challenge Bill to mortal combat!"

"Not a care in the world!" said Celia, a little later, watching her parents and talking intermittently to Les.

"Why should they have?" he answered. "Come to that, why should you have any cares?"

"Life bores me," the girl yawned.

"I talked like that in the beginning of my sophomore year. It used to make quite a hit. You've forgotten to ask what is life. I always die that."

"Les," she snapped, "I hate you! Your apperceptions are nebulous."

"That's a new one, I admit," he said. "I'll use it."

"To other girls?"

"Why not? If you won't have me, I must try my luck somewhere else."

"You have an attenuated soul substance, Les."

"Feed it with affection. It will expand."

"The main trouble with you is that you couldn't surprise me in any way. I know all your mental reactions. You never jump off the road. I could surprise you, Les, and I've a good mind to." Celia paused. "Perhaps I ought to tell you the whole romantic affair."

Leslie Barron looked at her, frowning. The word "romantic" spelled danger.

"Let the clutch in," he commanded. "You are not the only man here," she said. "Last night, when you were playing pool with Bill, I went out to the swimming pool. It was midnight. I went out to pick some asphodel."

"What's that?"

"A romantic blossom to be found in most gardens of verse. Les, I met a most adorable, godlike man. He looked at me like a wild faun and then disappeared in a cloud of star dust."

There was something harder and more resolute about Leslie than Celia had ever seen before. She had an uneasy impression that there were depths in his nature as yet unplumbed by her; but she would not tell him so.

"Don't be rough," she said, and took her hand away from his. "Don't scowl at me so."

"Godlike strangers who disappear in star dust interest me," he said slowly. "I'd like to break his d—d neck!"

"But you couldn't," she answered. "He is much more splendid than you are."

"You admit talking to him?"

The young man's tone annoyed Celia.

"I admit nothing."

"I accuse you of talking to him," persisted Les, whose voice was husky. "Of course, if you listened," she said airily, "why should I deny it?"

Great Queen of Song Attempted Too Much

The failure of many artistes who remain unknown comes from the fact that they do not know in what direction their power lies. The failures of great artistes nearly always come from their lack of knowledge of their own limitations. Few can, indeed, go on for long years with a record like that of Madame Adelina Pattil, of whom it is said that she had but one real failure in her artistic life. She was over fifty years old and had been a leading opera singer for over thirty years when, attracted by the opportunities which the role of Carmen offers, she undertook to sing it at Covent Garden, London. With her voice still beautiful, her stage technique at its strongest and her immense popularity, even she could not adapt herself to a role that was conceived for a different type of voice and a different type of person. She, the greatest singer of the century, failed to do what scores of lesser artistes were doing well, and what had proved the inspiration of some of those who were nearest to her in greatness.
