Who Invented the Bowie Knife?

James Bowie

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

THE name "Bowie knife" is inseparably linked with the history of the American frontier as are the names of those other weapons which played their part in the winning of the West—the "Kentucky rifle" (which, incidentally, should be the Pennsylvania rifle, since it was first made in that state), the Sharps buffalo gun, the Winchester and the Colt's six-shooter. It figured in innumerable bloody affairs, some of which have become classics in Western history. It was a Bowie knife which Wild Bill Hickok was said to have wielded in the fight which gave him the "Wild Bill" nickname—the so-called "fight" with the "Mcandles gang." It was a Bowie knife with which Al Packer, a prospector, killed his four companions while they were snow-bound in the San Juan mountains of Colorado and won for himself the dreadful title of the "San Juan Man-Eater." The Bowie knife has figured in tales of Jim Bridger and Jim Baker, Kit Carson and California Joe and a dozen other border notables—some of them authentic and others, no doubt, the product of the dime novelists.

Being such a famous weapon it would seem that its history should be well known. But attempt to trace its origin and see how far you get! Out of the maze of conflicting testimony, only one fact emerges clear—that it was named for one of the Bowies. But was it Resin, John or James? As for the inventor of the Bowie knife, consider this evidence:

Read almost any encyclopedia and you will find it described as:

An American hunting dagger named after its inventor, Col. James Bowie. In a melee near Natchez (1827) in which six men were killed and fifteen wounded, the colonel dispatched an opponent with a knife made out of a blacksmith's rasp or big file, and this knife, he afterward had fashioned at Philadelphia into the weapon with which his name is associated.

Edward S. Ellis, one of the earliest biographers of Davy Crockett, devotes considerable space to Resin and James Bowie and respecting the invention of the famous Bowie knife, an intimate lady friend of the Bowie family, in a note to the writer, under date of December, 1873, and written in New Orleans, says: "The knife was invented by Resin Packer. The name of James, for the purpose of hunting wild cattle on the plains of the Opelousas. The first one was manufactured by one of his slaves at the private blacksmith shop on his plantation. It was never intended for any other use except that of a simple hunting-knife, nor was it ever used otherwise, until in the duel at Natchez, when James Bowie acted as second, and all the seconds were drawn into the fight.

In May, 1836, the New York Star said of this knife:

It was invented by Col. James Bowie, who was killed by the Mexicans at the capture of the Alamo. About 18 months ago, three brothers named Bowie, in the state of Mississippi, had a deadly conflict with seven other persons armed with every species of weapon, the brothers being armed only with a large knife. This weapon they handled with such dexterity as to decide the conflict in their favor, although numbers were against them, and it has since been called the "Bowie-knife."

The Red River Herald of Natchitoches, La., copied this article and in June printed it with the following:

This account is entirely inaccurate. The first weapon of this description was manufactured in the parish of Rapides, in the state of Louisiana near the plantation of Capt. Charles Mulholland, on Bayou Boeuf, in 1820. This knife was made according to the instructions of Col. James Bowie, then known by the appellation of "Big Jim"

Bowie. It was intended to answer the purpose of blazing trails and of a hunting knife. The colonel carried this weapon for five or six years, when the dreadful conflict, yet fresh in the recollections of many, took place in the state of Mississippi, a circumstance which at once gave it an unrivaled reputation. All the steel in the country was immediately converted into bowie-knives.

Several years ago in a "Centennial Edition" of the Arkansas Gazette there appeared an article called "The True History of the Bowie Knife," with a biographical sketch of its inventor, James Black," written by Dan W. Jones, governor of Arkansas from 1897 to 1901, who knew Black intimately for 30 years. This, in brief, is his story:

Black was born in New Jersey in 1800, ran away from home at the age of eight to Philadelphia where he was apprenticed to a manufacturer of silver plate. After serving his apprenticeship and becoming expert at the trade he emigrated to the West in 1818, eventually coming to the town of Washington, Ark., where he found employment with a blacksmith. Washington was a frontier town, where all men were armed, the favorite weapon being a knife. Black began manufacturing knives which soon became famous for the temper of their steel. He was accustomed to make them to order from a pattern of the exact size and shape desired by the customer. He plated them with gold or silver and his price ranged from $5 to $52, depending upon how they were plated. But the quality of the tempered steel was always the same, according to Jones, who continues:

About 1831 James Bowie came to Washington, and gave Black an order for a knife, furnishing a pattern, and desiring it to be made within the following 60 or 90 days, when he would call for it. Black made the knife according to Bowie's pattern. He knew Bowie well and had a high estimation of him as a man of good taste as well as of unflinching courage. He had never made a knife which suited his own taste in point of shape and concluded this would be a good opportunity to do so.

Consequently, after completing the knife ordered by Bowie, he made another, and when Bowie returned Black showed both of them to him and explained the difference, at the same time giving him his choice at the same price. Bowie promptly selected Black's pattern.

Shortly after this Bowie became involved in a difficulty with three desperadoes who assaulted him with knives. He killed them all with the knife Black had made. After this, when anyone ordered a knife from Black, he would order it to be made like Bowie's, which finally was shortened into "make me a Bowie-knife." Thus this famous weapon acquired its name. Bowie himself was not a mechanic of any kind. He was killed in the Alamo with Davy Crockett, and the legend runs that his body was surrounded by dead Mexicans whom he had killed with that same knife.

Other men made knives in those days, and they are still being made, but no one has ever made the "Bowie-knife" except James Black. Its chiefest value was in its temper. Black undoubtedly possessed the Damascus secret. It came to him mysteriously and it died with him in the same way.

Such is one story of the invention of the Bowie knife, which sounds authentic. But, says another story, the real inventor of the knife was Jesse Cliffs, a blacksmith employed by the elder Resin Bowie (father of the three Bowie boys). Some time after the invention of the knife James engaged in an altercation with Maj. Norris Wright which resulted in Wright shooting at James. The latter was saved when a silver dollar in his pocket deflected the bullet. Drawing his own pistol, James aimed at Wright but the trigger snapped. His father then gave James the knife, saying, "This will never snap." It was this circumstance that led James Bowie always to carry

Hunt Big Treasure

Location of a great treasure, buried 500 years ago with the coffin of the first Ming emperor, may be traced following the recent discovery of a mysterious tunnel in a hill near Nanking, China.

The tunnel is seven feet high and three feet wide, and is lined with blocks of stone. The secret of the hoard of gold jewels and jade entombed with the ruler has puzzled historians and treasure seekers for centuries. When the emperor died, Nanking, his capital, had 13 gates.

Through all these coffins were borne simultaneously and 13 tombs were erected at as many different places, according to records, in order to baffle enemies and ghouls.

Houses for the Soul
Make yourselves nests of pleasant thoughts. None of us yet know, for none of us have been taught in early youth, what fairer palaces we may build of beautiful thought—proof against all adversity. Bright fancies, satisfied memories, noble histories, faithful sayings, treasure house of precious and restful thoughts which care cannot disturb, nor pain make gloomy, nor poverty take away from us—houses built without hands, for our souls to live in.—John Ruskin.

LIFE'S LITTLE JESTS

REJOICE QUIETLY.

"A man should strive to bear with the faults of his neighbors," said Mr. Gilpping.

"Perhaps so," said Mr. Gadspur, but when those faults take the form of ever-playing phonographs, one finger exercises on the piano, family fights, dogs, children and chickens, I don't suppose it is any great sin to leave a sigh of relief when such neighbors move away?"

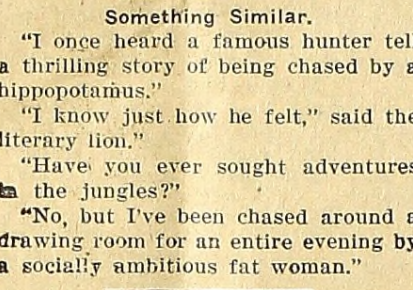

"No—just so your sigh isn't loud enough to be heard around the block."

Something Similar.
"I once heard a famous hunter tell a thrilling story of being chased by a hippopotamus."

"I know just how he felt," said the literary lion.

"Have you ever sought adventures in the jungles?"

"No, but I've been chased around a drawing room for an entire evening by a socially ambitious fat woman."

Spicily Educational.
J. M. reports overhearing this as he came out of a moving-picture place:
He—I liked that last piece. It's highly educational.
She—Educational? Why, it's about a horrid vamp.
He—Just so. You see I may meet a horrid vamp some day and then I'll know how to protect myself.

Tax on Politeness.
"How did you enjoy your dinner?"
"Not at all. Fifteen friends stopped to chat with us as they passed, and I had to stand up throughout the entire meal."

Those Girls.
Miss Ryval—"I didn't see you at the Barclay ball, dear."
Miss Bright—"That was probably because I was surrounded by men all the time."

Feelers.
He (cautiously)—Would you say "yes" if I asked you to marry me?
She (still more cautious)—Would you ask me to marry you if I said I would say "yes" if you asked me to marry you?

Describing Him.
"What sort of an appearing man is he?"
"Little, dried-up feller," replied the gaunt Missourian, "that looks like he always eat at the second table."

BROKE
Mrs. Justwed—You are very economical, Jack, where did you learn economy?
Mr. Justwed—Playing poker with your father.

His Poor Tale.
A teddy bear sat on the ice. As cold as cold can be; But soon he was up and walked away. "My tale is told," said he.

Hardly.
No, Maud, when Longfellow said, "Give us the man who sings at his work," he did not mean the undertaker.

Not Metaphorically Inclined.
"I understand your hat is in the ring."
"I don't know exactly what the phrase means," replied Senator Sorghum. "If I am ready for actual combat I don't care what becomes of my hat—I get into the ring myself."

Rainy Day Talk.
"I have seen better days," the tramp at the door began.
"So have I," replied the housekeeper, glancing at the darkening sky before she slammed the door.

NEW ENSEMBLES FOR FALL; LONGER SKIRTS THE EDICT

MAY as well begin to talk of things knitted now, for their importance on the fall and winter program is assured.

If advance models are a criterion, then the coming months will witness a showing of knitted apparel which in point of novelty, chic and finesse, will eclipse all that has gone before in the style parade.

In the new showings one is impressed with the miracle workings of Twentieth century knitted art. Time

"the mother of invention." When the "powers that be" sent forth the command from the throne of fashion that skirts must be longer, something had to be done about it. Of course when arbiters of the mode say "longer skirts," then longer skirts are a lady's choice. But how to carry out the letter of the law and not sacrifice the spirit of the flattering short skirt, aye, that was the question. Well, there's an answer, and here it is—the sheer transparent hemline.

Works like a charm, too! If skeptical, may this lovely frock of taffeta and tulle in the picture below prove to you the subtle charm of a see-through hemline. The skirt is long, just as Dame Fashion insists it must be, but really one is not unhappily conscious of the fact, because of its alluring transparency.

The net or maline, tulle or chiffon used for these hemlines to "look right" must be, if not an accurate match to the heavier material it borders, then at least a closely related tone or tint. The gown illustrated is styled of coral-colored taffeta, its tulle hem being a slightly darker shade as is also the alluring thin hair hat which is so smartly turned off the face. Among the elite a large transparent hat is a necessary luxury this summer. It may be black, natural white, or an exact match to the summery frock it tops, and its trim eloquently bespeaks the master touch of the milliner's hand, who turns and folds and plaits it in most ingenious ways, with a view to becomingly framing the face.

Note, please, the circular cut of the skirt which graces the superb gown in the picture. The bow of self-taffeta to cool days, hot days, to tennis court and golf field, to shopping tours, to motor trips, in fact, a perfect outfit for general town and country wear.

If fancy runs to lacy effects, then the new sweaters will make dreams come true, for some of them are that lacelike, they are like silken cobwebs. In addition to the colorful spun silk types, are heavier sorts in which wool or rayon has been interworked, often achieving arresting patternings. There's quite a flair at the present moment for these lacy effects done in delectable pastel colorings.

Yes, indeed, necessity certainly is also interprets a smart and important style theme.

This costume, so charming for bridesmaid or for garden-party wear, eloquently bespeaks the trend toward greater formality and elegance in the current mode. The line between sports and dress-up modes is being drawn more definitely each day. Smart afternoon clothes have become, therefore, a favorite theme with creators of styles, and the future promises an increasing elaboration of modes for afternoon and evening wear.

CHEAP FEED MADE CHEAPER BY SILO

Small Silage Cutters Reduce Big Expense of Labor.

(By BERT S. GITTINGS, in the Dakota Farmer.)

Men who cannot afford high-priced feeds and who had to cut expenses on every corner have been the most loyal and enthusiastic friends of the silo. When they found silo filling costs higher than necessary and the work of filling harder than they liked, these dairymen and feeders turned their attention to cutting costs and lightening labor. Rather than allow their silos to stand wastefully idle and to operate without a feed which gave them 30 to 35 per cent greater returns for their corn crop, they managed instead to eliminate a great deal of unpleasant silo-filling backache and to make this cheap corncult roughage still cheaper.

The old silo filling ring has passed out of the picture in many sections of the cornbelt and the small crew of two, three, or four men has taken its place. Under the old method, the silo owner was compelled to spend two or three weeks exchanging work with his neighbors every fall. With the new plan he fills his own silo when his corn is ready without waiting for anyone else to finish first and without hiring extra men.

Small, individually owned and operated ensilage cutters driven by the farm tractor or an electric motor have made possible this minimum expenditure of man labor. Present day, small or medium-sized cutters will take feed very nicely without a man at the feed table, experience shows, while it is becoming more generally conceded every year that a trampler inside the silo is unnecessary. Thus, the man on the wagon is the only one needed at the silo. He can start the tractor or motor when he comes in with his load by the turn of a crank or by closing a switch and can level out the ensilage in the silo after he has unloaded if he wishes. In many instances farmers have filled silos alone in this way, although crews of two or three men are more common.

Evidence is accumulating that the weight of silage in itself insures proper packing. The extent of settling is a measurement of packing.

Proteins in Ration of Dairy Cows Important

The proteins in foods are chiefly used by the animal for the production of lean meat and the repair of tissues, i. e., for growth and maintenance purposes; but they may, if sufficient in quantity, also be used for supplying heat and making fat, though they are not so economical for these purposes as starch and sugar.

In milk-producing animals the proteins in the food also supply the raw material for the proteins in the milk, of which there is 3 to 4 per cent (say one pound in every three gallons).

While the proteins can also make fat and give heat, it is most important to remember that no other substance can replace them in the making of muscle, milk casein and albumen, etc., hence ration for all animals must contain enough proteins to supply the needs of the animal for repairs of tissues, growth, and the production of milk.

Dairy Notes

In feeding the dairy cow, include oats in the ration for its vitamins.

Improved practices in management may often change loss into profit with a dairy herd.

A goal of 8,000 to 12,000 pounds of milk per cow is a reasonable aim for the average dairyman.

One way of avoiding calf troubles is to keep the barn ventilated. Foul air is a great disease carrier.

Don't breed the cows to freshen in spring. The cow fresh in fall is the high producer and money-maker.

Don't fail to carry a notebook. It is easy to forget but it is very necessary to keep tab on breeding dates.

It is an easy matter to produce clean milk if one has the information at hand as to how to do it, and will follow the very simple rules that are necessary.

Dairy farmers who would not feel that they can afford the price of a high-class proven bull can, if they exert great care in selecting a bull calf of high quality, develop him into one of the greatest assets of the farm.

The physical condition of many dairy cows in the spring bears ample testimony to inadequate feeding during the winter. Profitable production cannot be expected from underfed cows, nor is it good herd management to underfeed.

THE Fisk tread is thick and tough, equal to all road strains. But it is not too heavy for the sidewall, nor is the sidewall too heavy for the bead. Every part is perfectly balanced; there are no weak points.

That is why Fisk All-Cord Tires wear evenly—why they do not give way at the shoulder or rim long before the tread is worn out.

Fisk balance, together with other Fisk features, gives you what you want most from your tires—comfortable, dependable mileage. Try a Fisk in place of that worn-out tire, and see how Fisk's balanced construction can cut your tire costs.

Won't Reveal Edison's Rubber Secret

These three youthful berry pickers came upon Thomas A. Edison in a field near Brookside, N. J., where he was gathering wild flowers which he told them were to be used in cultivation for his rubber exploitations.

Czar's "Jewelry" Melted

New York.—When the Russian czar's crown jewels melted and ran down the side of her kitchen radiator Mrs. Rebecca Barasch of 556 Crown street, Brooklyn, knew that she had been gypped.

She was further convinced when the few jewels which did not melt proved to be a poor grade of glass, and as a result she spent three days in the rogues' gallery at police headquarters.

In the end she succeeded in identifying three men from whom she had bought the treasure of the late Romanoff for $900, and all three were arrested and locked up at Brooklyn police headquarters on charges of grand larceny.

They said they were Stefano Anillo, thirty-four years old; Frank Russo, thirty-six, and Emanuel Fallacana, thirty. On being questioned regarding the jewel transaction all three denied they were in any way connected with it.

According to Mrs. Barasch two of them, Anillo and Fallacana, met her at the corner of New York avenue and Union street, May 22, and started talking in Russian.

The two told her they were refugees from the Soviet regime and that they were anxious to find the local Russian colony.

"You see," said one, "we stole the czar's crown jewels. They are worth a fabulous fortune and we must either sell them or give them to somebody to keep for us."

Mrs. Barasch had heard about the crown jewels being sold on the Rue de la Paix, but apparently forgot about it. She asked to see them, and was shown a pocketful of gleaming, crystal diamonds. They almost took her breath away but she asked:

"How can I tell that they are real?"

"Why we will take you around to any jewelry store," offered one of the refugees, and they started out. As they were about to enter one, Russo, it is alleged, stepped from the doorway.

In the end Mrs. Barasch took all three men to her bank. She drew out every cent that she had, $300, and apologized for not having more.

Then she took the Romanoff fortune home in her handkerchief and laid it out on the radiator while she prepared dinner. There were 20 big diamonds in all. Mrs. Barasch thought herself as wealthy as Czar Nicholas was, but when half way through peeling the potatoes she happened to cast a glance at her treasure.

Only eight remained. The others were a puddle of paste on the floor and these eight she later found to be glass.

In arresting the three men, the detectives stated that they watched their house for three days and that reports of their having sold crown jewels in Detroit have been received.

New Facts About Oxygen

Berkeley, Calif.—Oxygen, the gas which constitutes a fifth of the air we breathe, and which is essential to our life, is really triplers. It is not twins, as was recently suggested.

or single, as it was thought for many years. This has been discovered here by two University of California experimenters, Prof. W. F. Glauque and H. L. Johnstone. They have found that oxygen in the air consists not only of the element with atomic weight of sixteen but that there are small numbers of heavier atoms.

Some weigh seventeen and others weigh eighteen. These make up forms of oxygen which are like ordinary oxygen in all respects except atomic weight, and are called isotopes of oxygen. Many other elements, notably lead, have been found to have isotopes, chemically similar, but of different atomic weight.

The investigators have discovered this fact from a study of the way light is absorbed as it passes through a thick layer of air, as with sunlight in the late afternoon. The oxygen absorbs certain wave lengths of light, and from these Professor Glauque and Mr. Johnstone have calculated the weight of the atoms that produce the effect.

Recently they found that some of the oxygen molecules were made of an atom of weight sixteen combined with one of weight eighteen. Since they announced this they have discovered the presence of the third isotope, so that there is still a third kind of oxygen molecule, consisting of an atom of weight sixteen combined with one of weight seventeen.

However, the atoms of weight sixteen must be in the vast majority, and the typical molecule must consist of a pair of atoms of weight sixteen, as the atomic weight of ordinary oxygen has been determined to be sixteen with great precision.

Any great amount of the other isotopes would make the average atomic weight of oxygen appreciably greater than this figure.

Harrisonburg, Va.—Another beautiful underground world—the Blue Grottoes, the caverns used in part by soldiers of the Civil war as a hiding place and camping site and on the walls of which are inscribed the names of thousands of Confederate and Union warriors from Ohio, Iowa, Indiana, Illinois, Pennsylvania, Maryland and Virginia—was formally opened by Col. E.

T. Brown and his son, Maj. Edward M. Brown, who have spent more than $100,000 in developing this cave.

The opening of the Blue Grottoes makes six caverns in operation in the limestone country of the Shenandoah valley. More than $1,000,000 have been spent in developing these caverns for sightseeing purposes and it is known that $5,000,000 has been refused for them from northern capitalists seeking to operate the group as one chain.

The Blue Grottoes was developed by the Brown interests, which have expended more than $1,000,000 in developing the Endless Caverns near New Market, the Natural Chimneys and Sapphire Pool near Mount Solon, Va.

Chief interest in Blue Grottoes centers around the thousands of names of Civil war soldiers which are inscribed upon its walls and which can easily be read today. The caverns also have the vari-colored formation peculiar to places of this kind and which are formed by drops of water through limestone formations extending over thousands of years. The caverns are located eight miles north of Harrisonburg on the Valley pike and run under a huge limestone knoll on the Moore farm.

During the Civil war both Confederate and Union soldiers made part of these caverns running back under the knoll, a hiding place and a camping site, especially in stormy weather. The mouth of the cave was large enough for many horses to enter. In fact, the first opening was used as a stable for horses. The soldiers would go back further into the channel where, safe and unmolested from the enemy, they carved their names on the sides of the walls.

went on as if nothing had been said to him.

At the table Chester sulked a good deal or ate as if the process were wholly to satisfy his appetite. Generally he did not like what was set before him and made derogatory comments on the menu. Father and mother took little notice of this attitude; they were evidently quite used to it and were neither surprised or shocked.

Chester is the illustration of one sort of modern training of the young. He is being allowed to express his own personality, to develop without restraint. If he learns good manners, or modesty, or self-control, or unselfishness, or regard for other people's comfort or personal rights he will pick these things up himself through experience and hard knocks, and possibly through watching some one else whose example he thinks well of. If I may judge from the way he acted between Seattle and Minneapolis the parental, restraining hand has not yet been laid on him.

TIRED OF BEING JUST "AND WIFE"

"... and wife," repeated Lois Seaman bitterly as she threw the morning paper from her. "Eugene Seaman—and wife."

She rose from her chair and started to pace the floor. "They could at least have said Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Seaman. Three years ago they were mightily glad to say 'Miss Lois Morgan' when I was really doing something—known to the reporters as head of the women's department of the National bank, president of the Women's club, but now, I am just—and wife! No identity—I hate it."

She went back to the big chair before the fireplace and covered her face with her hands.

"I want to do something. I want to make a mark in the world—why can't Gene see it? Barbara and May can take over the house—I have brains—I want to accomplish—do something besides see there is plenty of food in the ice box and that the corners are not dusty and that Gene's clothes are pressed when he is toastmaster at a banquet where he can stand up and let people know he is accomplishing something—not standing still. Oh, I hate it—I hate it."

There was a sound of a door opening and some one whistled in the hall. Lois puckered her mouth to reply, but the whistle did not come. She sat up quickly, wiped her eyes and smiled at her husband as he came in to the room.

"Hello, Gene. Aren't you home early?"

"Knocked off for some golf, Loey. Want to run out to the club with Glover and me?" He stopped short. "What's the matter? You've been crying."

"Nothing. I don't care to go out today."

"Why have you been crying, Loey?" "I wish you wouldn't ask me. I—I am—so unhappy, Gene, doing—accomplishing nothing! I—I want to be more than just—and wife." And she reached over and picked up the morning paper from the floor. She pointed her finger at the article and he read aloud:

"Among the guests present were Dr. and Mrs. Davidson Wynne, the Hon. Theodore and Mrs. Benton, Eugene Seaman, the well-known criminal lawyer, and wife—"

He looked down at her as he folded the paper quietly and placed it on the table. "Are you crying because it does not say, 'formerly Miss Lois Morgan, president of the Women's club and head of the women's department of the National bank, well known for her splendid work in—'"

"Gene, stop! You are laughing, and I won't have it. Oh, can't you see? I want to do something—climb—accomplish—work—live! I want the contacts I used to have."

"I have tried to see from every angle, Loey, but—I cannot! You have a position—the greatest position in the world a woman can fill, that of—wife—home-maker—and I had hoped, mother, I am sorry I have not been able to make your position more agreeable; make you happy, although you will admit I have tried."

He sat in an easy chair, bending forward, his thin, capable hands clasped between his knees. His eyes traveled slowly over the splendid big living room; the soft-piled rugs, glistening mahogany; soft-shaded lamps, and they came back to rest tenderly upon the slender, pretty woman curled in the corner of the davenport, her head resting against her arm.

"I am sorry, sorry, that I have failed, Loey."

"You—you haven't failed, Gene. You are wonderful—but—but I should not—you should have married Bernice Mallory, Gene."

"But I didn't love Bernice, Loey. I loved you." He sat down beside her and took her hands in his.

"I do not feel that I have the right to stand in the way of your happiness, dear. I remove all my objections to your taking your old position back, on condition you will—stay married to me."

Her arms went about his neck. "Silly! As though you could get rid of me. I love you with all my heart."

The next night she met him at the door, her face radiant. She wore her prettiest dress and beyond in the softly lighted dining room he saw a centerpiece of tea roses.

"Bought them all myself—with the money I start to earn—next week," she announced gayly. "I want to see Mr. Slader and he said that my fourth successor—fourth, Gene!—was not satisfactory and I could have my position back, but he wanted to know what you thought about it. I told him frankly and I don't know yet whether he agrees with your viewpoint or mine. He mentioned our lovely home, your success and all that, but he seemed glad I am coming back."

Gene pulled a telegram from his pocket and passed it over to her. "If I had thought you really meant what you said I would have wired Aunt Mary not to come, but you see by the wire she leaves tonight."

Lois read the message aloud: "Leaving Wednesday night to make you and your wife a good, long visit. Love to you both. AUNT MARY." Lois stamped the floor angrily. "There it is again—and wife! Oh, why did she have to come right now—"

Just when I have a position? I can't help it, Gene! I'm going to work, anyway."

"Of course, you are, Loey," soothingly. "But I am sorry it has happened that way, too. She is so old-fashioned; thinks a woman's place is in the home, and as this is her first visit to our home—postponed every year since we were married—it is unfortunate, but I will explain as best I can."

He leaned against the fireplace, his head resting against the mantel. There was a reminiscent smile on his fine face.

"Aunt Mary took me when mother died when I was five. She never had children of her own—she and Uncle Jim had lived alone in the old place, until I came. I remember how she always met me at the door at night, took my lunch box, kissed me, and told him to hurry because supper was ready. Then, the three of us would sit in front of the fireplace and Uncle Jim would tell me a wild west story—they were thrillers, too—and Aunt Mary would listen to my prayers while I warmed my back, and they both took me upstairs to bed, and would stand, their arms about each other, looking down at me until I closed my eyes."

There was silence for a moment before he continued softly:

"Their love, their devotion to each other, was the most beautiful thing I have ever seen. She was just happy being his wife. She wanted nothing else, and I guess that is why I am so narrow on the subject. Loey—I was brought up that way. I have tried, ever since I married you, to be like what Uncle Jim was to Aunt Mary. To make you happy in my love—content to just be my wife. The night he died, she turned to me and said, 'Gene, he has just gone on before. When my call comes he will be waiting on the other side—for his wife.' And he is still waiting. I think I can make her understand, Loey, and we can make her visit happy, although the days may be lonely. And she will be proud of you. I know, and she will love you—"

Lois slipped her arms about his neck and drew his face to hers.

"Oh, Gene—I am so glad you told me—I want to be like Aunt Mary—I will call Mr. Slader right now, and tell him I have decided to keep my other, my most precious position in the world—your wife—and all that goes to make her position glorified."

Ancient Moroccan City

Picturesque but Dirty

Rabat, Morocco, built almost 800 years ago by the labor of 40,000 Christian slaves, figured in the late news in connection with a recent attack of tribesmen from the Atlas mountains on a company of Senegalese infantry and Moroccan camel troops.

Rabat is located on the northwestern coast of French Morocco, adjacent to the old city of Sale, a former lair of corsairs. It is also near the ruins of Shella, a half-forgotten city that was once a thriving Roman colony.

There are two present-day Rabats, French Rabat and the native town, says the National Geographical society. French Rabat is like a bit of transplanted Europe. In its streets are women wearing Parisian clothes, business men in sack suits and smartly uniformed French officers. Everything is modern and efficient and over 13,000 Europeans live within its borders.

Native Rabat is another story. Squat houses line the narrow streets. From the mosque tower the muezzin calls the faithful to prayer. Turbaned Arabs of the Beni Hassan tribe, Berbers from the hills and negroes file through the bazars. Heavily veiled women travel silently through the crooked streets. Groups of the sick and the deformed, clad in dirty white rags, lie in the streets of the bazars, begging alms from the passers-by.

There is slight demand for chairs or knives and forks in the souks. Chairs are used only by the stiff-legged Christian tourists and knives and forks are not necessary to eat couscous, the staple viand of the Moroccan meal.

Couscous is made with flour and meat and vegetables, and tastes not unlike the American dish of dumplings cooked with meat. It is served in a big pot and everyone sticks in his hand and brings forth his portion in three fingers. To use four fingers or two fingers is extremely bad manners. Moroccan etiquette demands three.

Two Mouths

Once in awhile, of course, even a very patient mother finds herself becoming impatient under the rapid-fire questioning of an inquisitive child. One such mother said to her little daughter:

"Now, please don't ask mother any more questions this morning."

A bit later the child returned.

"Mother, I wish I had two mouths."

"Why in the world do you want two mouths?"

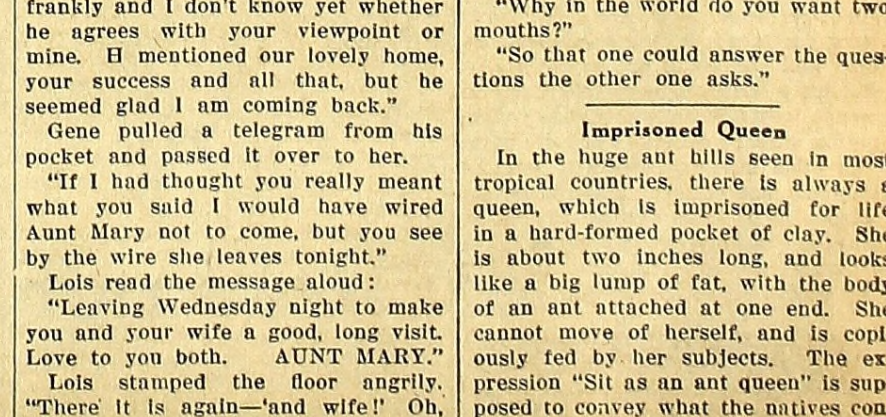

"So that one could answer the questions the other one asks."

Imprisoned Queen

In the huge ant hills seen in most tropical countries, there is always a queen, which is imprisoned for life in a hard-formed pocket of clay. She is about two inches long, and looks like a big lump of fat, with the body of an ant attached at one end. She cannot move of herself, and is copiously fed by her subjects. The expression "sit as an ant queen" is supposed to convey what the natives consider the acme of prosperous ease.

What the Gray House Hid

The Mystery of a Haunted Mansion by Wyndham Martyn

"I wonder where the devil I am!" Leslie murmured. Then his thoughts turned upon the big fighter whom he had knocked out.

Leslie knew that this stocky jailer had the power to inflict such a punishment. His forearms were enormous, and his chest measurement could not be less than fifty inches.

Mr. Appleton and two companions faced him. It was a room fifteen feet square, well furnished, and artificially lighted.

"Ah!" said Mr. Appleton benevolently. "Here we have Mr. Barron Jr.!"

His spirits had fallen. The Barrons were accustomed to his absences and long silences.

"He is Quite a Nice-Looking Boy, Isn't He?" the Woman Said.

"I don't like your way of showing it," Leslie snapped. He had seen by this time that the third person was the wild fawn who lay at ease in a big chair, puffing at a cigar.

"He is quite a nice-looking boy isn't he?" the woman said, in a low, pitched, charming voice.

"The Barrons are all good-looking," said Mr. Appleton. "I have commented before on the Grecian cast of Mr. Leslie's head."

"Have the kindness to leave my head alone," Leslie growled. "Certainly, certainly!" Mr. Appleton assented.

"What makes you suppose that?" "Because I shall be missed."

"What makes you suppose that?" "Because I shall be missed."

lie said heatedly. "The Gray house isn't a hotel where one checks out and is promptly forgotten."

Leslie was annoyed that the wild fawn and the woman found in his assurance something almost humorous.

Even in that moment Leslie wondered by what magic of authority the little plump man controlled such ruffians as these.

CHAPTER IX

The day on which, as the Hanby family supposed, young Barron had taken his early morning departure, saw the arrival of half a dozen visitors.

Leslie opened his mouth to speak, but thought better of it. He was about to remind Appleton that the household would be alarmed because he had gone away in evening clothes, leaving his other belongings in disarray.

"We have attended to all that," Appleton said kindly, guessing his thoughts. "Ch, dear me, yes! A life-time of a business in which detail plays so important a part is a great aid I shall presently pack your grip."

"Where are we?" Leslie demanded. "His spirits had fallen. The Barrons were accustomed to his absences and long silences.

"Am I held for ransom?" "You are held because it would be inconvenient to let you go."

"You said it!" James commented. "So mighty inconvenient that it wouldn't make me sleep no worse if I had orders from the chief to croak you!"

A sudden panic swept over Leslie. He was not used to consorting with criminals. The sense of real danger came to him.

"He is quite a nice-looking boy, isn't he?" the woman said, in a low, pitched, charming voice.

"The Barrons are all good-looking," said Mr. Appleton. "I have commented before on the Grecian cast of Mr. Leslie's head."

"Have the kindness to leave my head alone," Leslie growled. "Certainly, certainly!" Mr. Appleton assented.

"What makes you suppose that?" "Because I shall be missed."

are frequently stained to enhance their appearance and resistance to weather. Wood siding and shingles have integral insulating value in themselves, increasing comfort and fuel economy in the winter and keeping the house cool in summer.

Some Original Ideas of American Builders

While siding and shingle exterior coverings for homes did not strictly originate in this country, being largely modifications of existing methods brought over by the early settlers.

Houses covered with rough bevel siding boards, or clapboards, and crudely split shakes, or shingles, directly succeeded the first log cabins of the early colonists in this country.

Cedar and pine and other durable native woods are used in modern manufacture of shingles and siding, which should have to do that. Really and truly, Mr. Barron, we are not murderers or kidnapers.

"You will be held until a certain deal that we are putting through is successfully accomplished. Your treatment depends on yourself.

Assuredly Leslie could expect no mercy from Luigi, the strong man. So there was another prisoner! Leslie felt lonely and fearful.

Even in that moment Leslie wondered by what magic of authority the little plump man controlled such ruffians as these.

Leslie opened his mouth to speak, but thought better of it. He was about to remind Appleton that the household would be alarmed because he had gone away in evening clothes, leaving his other belongings in disarray.

"Where are we?" Leslie demanded. "His spirits had fallen. The Barrons were accustomed to his absences and long silences.

"Am I held for ransom?" "You are held because it would be inconvenient to let you go."

ORCHARD CLEANINGS

APPLE SCALD MAY BE MUCH REDUCED

Pick the Fruit When Mature and Highly Colored Best.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Apple scald, one of the most serious diseases with which the apple industry must contend, can be largely controlled or reduced if growers, dealers, and storage companies will make use of available knowledge on control and apply measures now known to be effective.

The maturity and color of the apples at picking time are very important factors in determining their susceptibility to scald, the more mature and better-colored fruit scalding less than that which is greener.

It is important, says Doctor Brooks, that the apples be cooled as quickly as possible after picking. They should be delivered to the storage plant promptly, and if delayed should be kept well aerated.

Where it is practicable to wrap apples in oiled paper this method has proved to be the most complete preventive of scald that has been found.

A copy of the bulletin may be obtained by writing to the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

TELEPHONE NOW AT PRESIDENT'S ELBOW

President Hoover has had a telephone installed on his desk in the White House so that no longer will it be necessary for the Chief Executive, when he wishes to use the telephone or to answer a call, to go to a booth in a small room adjoining the office. Hitherto, this has been the practice, but this did not coincide with the President's idea of efficiency.

Herbert Hoover, like Calvin Coolidge, depends greatly upon the telephone, and as he will use the instrument frequently, he believes it should be as conveniently located as possible. When Calvin Coolidge was President, he found the telephone a great time-saver, making a much greater use of its facilities both for local and for long distance calls, than did Woodrow Wilson, William Howard Taft or Theodore Roosevelt.

WHAT! NEW TIRES FOR OLD?

WE'LL TAKE THAT TIRE! Not much good to you any more. Looks like it's apt to blow most any time. But we'll take it in on a brand new Silvertown.

HERE'S good news for keen tire buyers. For a short time only we're offering motorists of this city a real trade-in proposition on tires.

Perhaps the tires on your car are getting old. Just bring them to us. We'll fix you up with brand new Silvertowns... then deduct the value of your old tires from the bill. Surely that sounds like a fair proposition, doesn't it.

And when it comes to tires... you just can't beat Goodrich Silvertowns. We've sold tires for a long time... and we know the kind of stuff that Silvertowns are made of.

Come in and talk it over! Get this proposition in detail... and without delay.

Can we expect you—today?

HERE IT IS! The famous Silvertown, tire standard of the country. Made of stretch-matched cord, cured by the special Goodrich water-cure process. It's a big value, all right!
