HURON SHORE GIRLS CAMP IS SUCCESSFUL

A new and successful venture in co-operative religious education was the Girls Camp recently held at Huron Shore under the auspices of the Iosco Council of Religious Education. Those in attendance were the Misses Lois Chambers of Hemlock Road; Jessie and Isabelle King, Jean and Bessie Metcalf and Dorothy Bigelow of Tawas City; Dorothy Merschel, Elsie Hennigar and Ruby Evans of East Tawas; Inez Christenson and Amanda McGillivray of Oscoda; Charlotte Simpson of Grand Rapids; Mrs. O'Connor and Miss Brayton of Philadelphia, and Mrs. Evans of East Tawas.

Miss Simpson directed the recreation. Having won various honors in swimming and life-saving, as well as being versed in the work of the Campfire organization, Miss Simpson was admirably fitted for this work.

Under the leadership of Mrs. O'Connor, two hours were spent each morning in Bible study. "What time ye of Christ?" was the study theme. Because of her own life consecrated and fully surrendered to Christ, Mrs. O'Connor has the fine ability to touch other lives. As one girl said, "She lives every day just what she teaches."

The splendid success of the camp was due in no small measure to the untiring efforts of Mrs. Evans, who directed the project and acted as Camp Mother.

It is hoped the camp may become an annual affair. As expressed by one worker, "I believe that no project sponsored by the Council yields greater spiritual values than this Camp for Girls."

ACES DEFEAT LOCAL BOYS

Errors again meant the downfall of the local boys last Sunday at the hands of the Flint Aces by a score of 4 to 2. The game took place at the local athletic field.

The first inning, with a walk, two sacrifices and a hit, assisted generously by four Tawas City errors, netted Flint all its runs, whereas the local tribe scored but once in their half of the inning on a walk and two sacrifices. Their other run came in the fourth, when Musolf tripped into deep right-center and scored on a sacrifice.

Moeller pitched splendid ball for Tawas City throughout the game, striking out six men, allowing the Aces but four widely scattered hits, and holding them from scoring again in the remaining eight innings. His opponents on the mound proved equally successful against the locals, holding them to four hits and each striking out three men.

Following the disastrous outburst of misplays of the first inning, the home boys displayed splendid form in the field, as did the Aces, who had but one error chalked against them, and, as it turned out, this first frame proved the undoing of the locals.

The following is the box score of Sunday's game:

Little Journeys in Americana

By LESTER B. COLBY

Religion Among the Indians

RELIGION among the Indians of North America varied, in spite of their million superstitions and fears, probably as much as it varies today among the white men. The Indian, spiritually, looked up to the white man. Because he had little fear of demons and devils the Indian supposed he had some power to overcome them. From the white man the Indian got his first idea of a single God. It was a new thought to him. But the idea did not readily shatter his belief in a myriad of devils and demons and minor powers. Many Indians, when ill, would pray for relief and believe in divine healing.

James Smith, who spent six years among the Indians after adoption into a Caughnawaga family, put down on paper nearly a century and a half ago, a prayer he heard Tecaughretanago, a chief, deliver one night in his tent.

The old chief had fallen victim to rheumatism. This was a common complaint among them. Cold and exposure, wet feet, faulty clothing and sleeping on the ground were to blame. As a result of rheumatism Tecaughretanago for a long time could not walk. He was in intense pain.

Finally the old chief built himself a sweat-house with blankets and skins, and by dropping hot stones in water, developed heat and steam. After a period of sweating he got better. Then, one night, he delivered a prayer of thanksgiving and supplication, as follows:

"Oh, Great Being! I thank thee that I have obtained the use of my legs again; that I am now able to walk about and kill turkeys, etc., without feeling exquisite pain and misery. I know that thou art a hearer and helper, and therefore I will call upon thee. Oh, ho, ho, ho, ho.

"Grant that my knees and ankles may be right well, and that I may be able, not only to walk, but to run and jump logs, as I did last fall.

"Grant that on this voyage we may frequently kill bears, as they may be crossing the Sciota and Sandusky.

"Grant that we may kill plenty of turkeys along the banks, to stew with our fat bear meat.

"Grant that rain may come to raise the Ollentangy about two or three feet, that we may cross in safety down to Sciota without danger of our canoe being wrecked on the rocks. And now, Oh, Great Being! thou knowest how matters stand; thou knowest that I am a great lover of tobacco, and though I know not when I may get any more, I now make a present of the last I have unto thee, as a free burnt offering; therefore I expect thou wilt hear and grant these requests, and I, thy servant, will return thee thanks and love thee for thy gifts."

Smith says that when he saw the old chief burning the last of his tobacco as an offering he smiled. This offended Tecaughretanago who, showing his displeasure, addressed him saying:

"Brother—

"I have somewhat to say to you, and I hope you will not be offended when I tell you of your faults. You know when you were reading your books in town I would not let the boys or anyone disturb you; but now, when I was praying, I saw you laughing.

"I do not think you look upon praying as a foolish thing; I believe you pray yourself. But perhaps you think my mode or manner of praying foolish; if so, you ought in a friendly manner to instruct me and not make sport of sacred things."

Smith records:

"I acknowledged my error and he handed me his pipe to smoke in token of friendship and reconciliation though at this time he had nothing to smoke but red willow bark."

He also says that the rains came and raised the creek, that they killed four bears and got some fat turkeys, and a bit later tobacco, and that all the requests in the old chief's prayer were fulfilled.

Rome Cats Continue to Live Amid Ruins

Cats are not sacred in Rome, but they have for many years enjoyed a prescriptive right to inhabit some of the ancient monuments of Roman times such as the Forum of Trajan and the small enclosure around the Pantheon.

Here those that have been discarded by their owners or have reverted to wildness have long been allowed to live a privileged life in imposing archaeological surroundings, receiving food and water from kindly tenants of nearby houses.

Recently, a municipal edict ordered the destruction of these archeological cats, but protests by the public and letters in the newspapers have brought about a revocation of the stern decree, and the felines are to be permitted to live as before in classical solitude and peace.

"Oh, no, Johnny; 'nails' are boys and 'fenalls' are girls," she proudly exclaimed.

Colleges to Select Planes

New York.—Six American universities equipped for research in aeronautical engineering have been selected by the Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce to test commercial airplanes in accordance with a new code of procedure on standard performance.

The new code, drawn up by a committee of the Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce, headed by Prof. Alexander Klemin of New York university, is expected to provide manufacturers with a standard basis upon which to compute the speed, rate of climb, ceiling, landing speed, and other performance data which characterize the capabilities of their planes.

Since there is no standard procedure now allowed by the manufacturer in computing these data, experts say that there is a wide range of inaccuracies in the results obtained and advertised.

New York university, University of Michigan, Purdue university, Stanford university, University of Washington, and the California Institute of Technology are the six outstanding engineering institutions selected to carry on the standard tests. Officials of the six universities have accepted the designation of their institutions for the work and are prepared to start the first tests at an early date.

Plans for the first test to be conducted under the new code of procedure are to be announced by the Aeroautical Chamber of Commerce within a few weeks.

"The universities designated will undertake to have in readiness, at all times, the necessary instruments and apparatus and to be in a position to give reasonable service to manufacturers," Professor Klemin said. "Pilots for the planes to be tested may be selected by the manufacturer, but they must be licensed by the Department of Commerce. Qualified observers will be furnished by the universities, which will receive a certain remuneration for their work in making each test."

The manufacturer may ask for any or all of the following tests to be conducted: High speed; climb to 10,000 feet; ceiling; angle of initial climb; length of takeoff; time to take off; length of landing run; landing speed; minimum speed with power on, and minimum speed with power shut off.

The type and setting of propellers shall be the same for all tests and shall not be changed for different tests. In the case of multi-engine planes, performance tests may be made with one or more of the engines not in action. The code gives specific technical directions to the universities on how the tests must be conducted in order to be considered standard.

"Fool Laws" in Force in England

London.—Under one of the latest restrictions, to write or use a rubber stamp on any of the new currency notes is an offense punishable by a fine. As no such obligation existed in regard to previous issues, it is difficult, when handling notes in large numbers, to avoid violations of the new laws.

This, by no means, is the only act that is likely to trap the unwary. In a recent case at the Middlesex police court, two girls were fined for selling artificial flowers without a license. Had the blooms been real no such regulation would have been necessary.

The law relating to life on the road bristles with difficulties. For instance, while one may beg for cold water, to ask for hot is a misdemeanor. Further, although it is permissible to swear with impunity in your own house, to do so out of doors is to invite ownership.

The law relating to the ownership of fallen trees also is likely to trip many. If they are unsound or rotten, they are the perquisite of the tenant, but if the timber in them is of good quality and worth selling, they belong to the owner of the land.

Another act says an egg, to be new-laid, must be an egg laid in England, no matter how long ago; or that, while one may sell loganberries at any hour, to offer for sale green figs after 8 p. m. is to render one liable to a fine.

But perhaps the easiest of all laws to break is the one regarding the temperature of workshops wherein men are employed. In Kent, the officials of a concern were summoned because the temperature of the works was not more than six degrees higher than that prevailing outside. By giving an assurance that they would see that their employees enjoyed the warmth required by the act their case was eventually dismissed after payment of the costs.

THE FIXED IDEA

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

There has been running in New York and Chicago in recent months with a good deal of success and interest a play which alleges to reproduce in a realistic manner an evening in a metropolitan newspaper office. There is much disorder about the place, as it is represented, much profanity and vulgarity, and chewing of tobacco and references to booze fests among the habitués of the office, for in some way these things picture the fixed idea of what a modern newspaper office is like. Now the facts, if looked into, would seldom, if ever, bear out this idea. A newspaper office is neither more disorderly nor more profane than other business offices, but it would be hard to make the general public believe so.

I noticed a statement in one of our local papers the other evening to the effect that one of our fresh young citizens had been vigorously slapped in the face, as he deserved to be, for making advances to a young woman with whom he had no acquaintance, and who was acting in one of our local theaters. The fixed idea is pretty prevalent that all actresses, being of easy virtue, court attention from strangers and welcome invitations from anybody who is willing to spend money on them. A good many young men have been slapped in the face for erroneously assuming such a point of view. It is a long exploded idea in the minds of those who know anything about the matter that chorus girls and actresses are less moral, less balanced, and less regular in their lives and habits than other professional women.

The frock-coated, long-whiskered, absent-minded, near-sighted college professor has for decades been represented in humorous magazines and on the stage. So long and to such an extent has he been thus pictured that it has become a fixed idea in the minds of a majority of people who have never been to college that that is the sort of creature he is—impractical, imprudent, ill-dressed, a man of one idea, and that one a very narrow and unbusiness-like idea.

Now the college professor is in fact not so very different from other normal people. I am not infrequently asked, when on a railroad train I get into conversation with traveling salesmen, what line I am carrying or what business I represent. I have even been taken for a lawyer or a bank president at times and have not resented the suggestion in the least, and I am sure many of my colleagues would pass as representative business men, though there is a fixed idea against such a possibility.

There is the fixed idea in the minds of many people that all Italians work at hard labor, that all Greeks run restaurants, and Scotchmen are all stingy, and that plumbers continually rob the public and eventually grow rich. The fixed idea is the surest indication of inexperience and ignorance. Our ideas are set upon the subjects about which we know the least.

Lights of New York

A Real Touch of the Orient

New York.—The dramatic critics never seem to visit the Bowery's Chinese theater, a novelty, to be sure. It is housed in a building dingy past the point of dilapidation. The scenery is strangely assorted of old stock company sets eked out with chairs of uncertain lineage, brocaded cushions and other stage properties. The members of the orchestra sit in plain view on the stage. They appear in their shirt sleeves, their hats hung upon the scenery at the side. They play to lend "motif" to the drama.

An interesting point about these Chinese audiences, too. They are so steeped in the play that they readily prompt actors. If an actor hesitates for a second, his cue is likely to be shouted from the gallery. I imagine all this would baffle our critics—particularly the fact that one show is apt to take a week or more before its presentation is completed.

Money in His Shoes

Well, a fellow by the name of Billy Pierce, from Virginia, came to town and tried to figure out how to make a living. There are all kinds of rackets here. The problem is to select the right racket.

Billy, in his amateur moments, had made quite a bit of racket tap dancing. So he established a tap dancing school. They tell me it's the rage on Broadway. Everybody's tap dancing, including the people who live above me, as evidenced by the cracks in the plaster ceiling.

LANDIS GIVEN MEDAL

The American Legion distinguished service medal, hitherto awarded to only two Americans, was presented to Kenesaw Mountain Landis, former federal judge, now national baseball commissioner, at a testimonial luncheon at Chicago. Gen. John J. Pershing and Admiral R. E. Coontz are the other two who have been awarded the medal.

LONG BACK CAPE NEW FEATURE; POPULAR NECKLINE TREATMENTS

DESIGNERS are especially keen this season in regard to back-views. Apparently the prevailing sentiment is that if the back view is alluringly designful, the front will take care of itself. At any rate we are being made to feel that prepossessing backs are absolutely essential to good styling, and if one view or the other must be slighted let the front be sacrificed to the interests of the back.

A very successful interpretation of the attractive-back-view theory is that ing of backview elaboration is most frequently expressed. What with bus-tle effects, dowers positioned to accent the extreme back décolletage, fanciful trains and such, the back-view theme becomes a matter of paramount interest.

It requires the genius of an arithmetician to keep tab on the multiplicity of capelets, scarfs and neckline drapes which so enhance modern dress.

Since the majority of necklines are of the extremely long-at-the-back cape which ties in a scarf at the front. Note its effectiveness in the picture. This pretty informal evening gown is of yellow mousseline-de-soie printed in rose and blue.

While these deep-back capes are very charming made of self fabric as illustrated, they are even more flattering if the cape be made of fine lace. Among the delights in store for the style-seeking woman are lace capes, which can be obtained at the better neckwear departments, featuring unusually deep backs which narrow to shallow fronts where they tie in fichu-like manner.

It seems that all roads of fashion lead to attractive back views this season. Not only are evening frocks distinguished with elaborate back treatments, but the new suntan backs which are a chief topic of conversation in style circles, are proving a genuine inspiration to the stylist to create novel and flattering effects.

All sorts of "dressmaker" touches are being invented to enhance these daytime décolletage backs, chief among which are pert little bows posed here and there to best advantage. At sight of a cunning gingham mode of recent appearance one was inclined to argue that a "turn about is fair finished off with beguiling, novel, fluttering floating effects, it most assuredly behooves the seeker of things fashionable, to make a study of the cunning fantasies which now play such a picturesque role in concealing yet revealing unsleeved arms.

Graceful scarf collars like the one in the picture below interpret a popular neckline treatment. These oblong or panel-shaped lengths of fabric are manipulated in countless ways. If the material be very sheer then are they sure to fall into lines of alluring grace, which encourages the designer to take countless liberties in adjusting them.

One pretty arrangement is to bring the long scarf ends to the back where they are tied together or perhaps caught with a buckle or in some manner are ingeniously held in position. Quite clever is the thought of extending a single long streamer over one arm, the opposite end being fitted in to a kokelike formation.

Considerable attention is being given to neckline treatments in fashions for fall. It is said that lingerie touches on silk, wool and velvet frocks will be featured, and that clever ideas will be exploited, such as deep capes of lace, elaborate jabot collars and other fetching conceits.

A lovely three-piece jersey ensemble for early fall wear. The skirt and jacket are in brown, while the blouse is of beige. The box plaits in the skirt add charm to the outfit.

THE GRACEFUL SCARF COLLAR

tury-old houses of New York is in West Twenty-second street in old Chelsea. It was built in 1827 by an English cotton manufacturer named Gargill on a lot purchased from Dr. Clement C. Moore, author of "Twas the Night Before Christmas."

In this home gathered at various times the literary, social and stage celebrities of the time. William Cullen Bryant, Parke Goodwin and N. P. Willis were among the famous to enjoy hospitality in the place. Mrs. Edwin Forrest, when hostess, smoked "little white segars," presumably cigarettes—before the days of blind-fold tests and such.

play," for one, could almost believe that the front of the dress had been shifted around to the back. At any rate most of the intriguing detail had been concentrated at the back, the front being conspicuously unadorned. Little boys of the gingham were tied in tiers across the half-way-to-the-waistline open space at the back and there was a tie-back of a gingham sash which formed a butterfly bow in bustle effect.

Perhaps it is in connection with formal evening modes that the feel-

Color contrasts, too, will be worked out for fall in these scarf and capelet details. The model in the picture is typical of modes "on the way." This pretty sleeveless frock is fashioned of Madonna blue flat crepe. The scarf-collar is of eggshell tinted crepe edged with the blue.

For evening lovely scarf-yokes and collars are of silk net or tulle, which glitter with elaborate sequin embroideries together with fine metal thread stitchery.

"This is certainly rubbing it into the house detective," Pelham grinned. "What next, Junior? Do I salute you hereafter?"

"We begin our investigation at day-break," Junior continued. "If any people are there, we shall have a better chance to surprise and overpower them."

"Does Dina know?" Pelham asked. "No. This is one of the few things I've had a secret from her. She would worry. You know, old man, there may be danger. You're a deputy. It will be up to you to arrest them. That's why we are taking you along. Junior wanted to do the stunt alone. Observe his sullen face. He thinks we are going to steal his stuff."

"That cheers me," Pelham said. "I'm ready." He put a large hunting-knife in his pocket, and some cord. "No trained house detective ever ventures on a man-hunting expedition without a small ax. Junior, forget the difference in our rank, and get me one."

"When the boy had gone, he turned to Hanby. "Hi, old top," he laughed. "I've been d—d gloomy the last few days, but I honestly believe you've hit on something good!"

"I don't know about good," said the other slowly. "If the sanctuary holds the key to the mystery, I don't mind to see you poor Burton alive again. You see, he blundered right into the thick of things. If I'm right, he ran into the bunch that killed Red Kerr. I think that note was a forgery."

"The long, creeper-clad front of the Gray house faced the south. The distance from the extreme boundary of the building and the wire that inclosed the thicket was not more than fifty feet."

"When dawn came slowly down the skies, it found Hanby cutting methodically at the wire fence. When the others had passed in, he twisted the cut ends together, so that no passerby would notice that an entrance had been made."

"Permitting impetuous youth to bear the brunt of the opposition offered by the undergrowth, the expedition pushed its way forward. Ahead of them they heard the brook, and were eager to come to it."

"The three soon stood in an area lighted from above by the early light filtering through a screen of leaves. There was a chlorotic, eerie quality about this illumination. The stream flowed to them out of the darkness, and a few yards below it disappeared into a black channel."

"Can we work upstream?" Hanby asked. "Junior made an examination. "It seems impossible. This place has been cleared out for some special reason—probably because the brook makes that sharp turn, and they had to smooth it out."

"Exactly, Sherlock," his father gazed. "Even I see that; but why?" Junior, in answer, clutched the other's arm. He pointed upstream to the tunnel from which the water gouted its unvarying volume."

"What's that?" he demanded. "Peering into the shadows, the others could see that the stream carried a burden—a large dark mass that came steadily toward them. Sometimes it was completely immersed, and then it seemed to lift itself from the water, as if it were a huge animal swimming."

"G—d!" cried Hanby. "It's a man's body." The thing was now almost at his feet. He nerved himself to stoop down for a closer inspection. "It may be poor old Tom Burton!"

Shuddering a little, he turned the corpse over so that its face could be seen. The sightless eyes of Adolf Smucker stared up at him. "Death had not been kind to that mean and evil face. Smucker had come to be in agony and fear, and those emotions were graven on the face at which the three stared. His neck, in life thin and bony, was now black and swollen. On his narrow forehead was a purple bruise, stretching to the roots of the sparse hair."

"Instinctively Hilton Hanby released his hold, and the stream again took up its burden. "Thank God it wasn't Tom!" Pelham whispered. "Perhaps, if we wait long enough, he'll come by," Hanby said gloomily. He was depressed to think that he had allowed Junior to come with him. There was no doubt now that danger lay ahead of them. He knew he could not expect his son calmly to leave his father and his friend to face it alone, and if anything should happen whereby not all of them returned, what would Dina do?"

"Why had they murdered Smucker? And what was Smucker doing here? "Well," he said aloud, answering his own question, "speculation is silly and time-wasting. We've got to follow the stream. We can't do it down here, but the channel is easily seen from the outside."

"The three made their silent way along the narrow path, each with the conviction that at the end of it some thing of a vaguely dangerous character would be found. Pelham cautioned his companions to proceed more carefully. "D—n it," he said crossly, "why walk upright? For all you know, some one's looking along rifle sights at you this very moment. Crouch, man, crouch!"

"It's too early for anyone to be about yet," Hanby said. "At that, I think your advice is good." Suddenly he stopped and picked up a fountain pen. On a silver band around it were the initials "T. B."

"It's Tom's!" he whispered. "That letter was a forgery, after all. He's somewhere here. God save him from Smucker's fate!"

Hanby put the pen in his pocket and pushed on. "Appletor lied," he said a minute later. "Look—the lake wasn't filled in, after all!"

Now for the first time they heard voices. They drew back into an unlighted chamber, of whose dimensions they could not judge. Here they waited, having for the moment no set plan of action. Junior's guess seemed to be a correct one. For some reason which might soon be discovered, the owner of the Gray house was allowed to use only one-third of his cellar space. Unknowns occupied the rest, and had piled lumber in it. More than that—unknowns made their homes here and breakfasted here.

When the distant voices ceased, Hanby turned on the flashlight and looked about him. They had strayed into a storeroom. On shelves were potatoes, onions, carrots, pears, and apples. The floor was of concrete, and an electric light bulb was the source of illumination. "I bet I'm paying for their juice!" Hanby whispered.

He stopped suddenly. At last he heard footsteps. The three took what cover they could in the corners. Luigi entered, and switched on the light. It was Junior whom he first saw. With a roar of anger, he sprang at the crouching lad and had him by the throat.

Hanby remembered those dreadful bruises on Smucker's neck. He raised the heavy cane and brought it down on the strangler's head with all his strength. "Thanks, dad!" said Junior, making an effort at superb calm. Bill Pelham, with a yachtsman's skill, trussed up Luigi with knots that the ruffian could not break when he came to. The whole thing had occupied only a few seconds, and had made little sound. Luigi's cry of rage, apparently, had brought no one to investigate its cause. They left him to lie in a corner, covered with sackcloth. The odds were growing more favorable.

Hanby was amazed to see Bill Pelham stoop before another narrow door and slip a key into the lock. He had not noticed that his friend had taken a bundle of keys from the man he was bludgeoning. Pelham worked quietly. The oiled lock made no sound. Darkness was on either side of the door. As it swung open, the three, listening intently, heard a sound as of a man sighing.

"Celia! Celia!" sighed the unseen Phyllis. "Les!" Junior whispered, and turned his flashlight on his friend. Pelham shut the door and looked about for the inevitable electric light. Leslie Baron blinked at them in amazement. For weeks—or so it seemed—he had looked only into the cruel face of a jailer; and now he saw Celia's father, Celia's brother, and Bill Pelham. His face was blood-stained, and there was a deep cut over one eye, but he sprang to his feet readily enough. They could see that he was practically unharmed.

While the bird sanctuary was being violated, Mr. Appletor drank his early coffee and took his cereal and fruit in his customary unhurried way; but ill humor sat on his florid face, and the eyes peering through his thick lenses no longer looked childlike and bland. Three people were in the room with him—the woman who had a dozen years ago supplanted his wife, Jim Delaney, and Luigi Bartoli. Jim had been a bully all his life, a man who had innumerable times proved the futility of the axiom that every bully is a coward. By his side stood the big Sicilian, gesticulating wildly, and voluble beyond words.

"You murdered a man unneccesarily," said Appletor coldly. Stripped of the exuberant verbiage interspersed with parenthetical remarks in his native tongue, Luigi's story was this: He had gone into the little room, that was Smucker's cell, there to sleep off some strong wine, and to escape from the observant eye of John Delaney. While slumbering, he had suddenly awakened to find that Smucker had stolen his knife and was alone in the big white-peopled place, far, far from Jared. In her mind now as she lay she dwelt upon his strength. Perhaps if she thought of his health and vigor it would help her to gain them for herself. She must have some will power as he suggested. "If you think you're all right you are all right," he had said. Perhaps that was perfectly true. Perhaps she was only thinking she was unable to work. "Doctors are utter nonsense," he had said.

The kitchen clock struck eleven. She lifted her head from the pillow. Utter nausea overcame her. She let it flop down again, forced it up again. Panting, she summoned her will to aid her. Her feet sought weakly the floor. Ah, she was standing. She held to a chair, put her hands out, clutched the dresser, the sides of the doorway. At last she reached the dining-room. If she kept hold of something all the way she might get to the kitchen. But no, she couldn't, without stopping a second to rest there on the chair by the window. She sank weakly down, closed her eyes, conscious of nothing for a moment save of relief that she need not move her feet, maintain an upright position. Perhaps, even, she slept. What was that noise? Some one calling? Some one pounding none too vigorously on the porch. Who could it be? It sounded a little like Jared and yet it did not. She turned in the chair, looked out the window at its back. Was that Jared? Was it? Oh, surely not! And yet— She got up, opened the door, holding to the knob and looking incredulously out. "Oh, Jared, dear!" she cried, finally, and bent her gaze on the creature, half-sitting, half-lying, on the small porch. For a second she thought she must be delirious. That thing, disheveled, smeared with mud from which straw protruded, its clothes nearly torn to shreds, supinely clinging to the porch, was never strong, sturdy Jared Meadows, successful young farmer and stockman, her mighty husband? As she looked down at him from the doorway anguish darkened his eyes, contorted his dirt-begrimed face, twisted his pallid lips, caused his jaw, his chin to quiver. "I—I stumbled," he hoarsely whispered, "over a—a pig. K-killed the pig, b-b-roke my leg—"

"Jared, Jared," she cried, "my dear—"

His lips moved again and she stooped to hear. "I—I crawled to the car to crank it and get to town and I broke my—my arm. "G-get the doctor!" a frightful groaning. "Get the doctor." He closed his eyes, went very white and slumped down upon the porch floor. Phyllis Meadows proved herself then. She did not think herself all right and then became all right. She simply forgot herself, forgot appendicitis operations, weakness. She flew to the telephone. She summoned a doctor, two doctors. She called Jared's mother from town. She turned down Jared's bed, put water on to heat. All this for Jared, her hard, glorious Jared, like a woman demon possessed, she did.

In half an hour the two doctors had arrived and tall Mrs. Meadows with her keen, clear blue eyes, like her son's eyes—yesterday. In another half hour Jared Meadows was in his bed, the doctors busied with the broken leg, with the broken arm. In another half hour Jared Meadows, in splints and multitudinous white bandages, lay inert and colorless. In another half-hour the blue of Jared Meadows' eyes was visible to his wife as she leaned over him, flushed and intent. His lips opened and she heard: "I fell awful—awful—"

"You're all right, Meadows," interposed one of the doctors cheerfully. "You'll be fit as a fiddle again in six weeks."

"No—no. Don't hurry me, doc—"

He lay silent for a moment. And then Phyllis, bending close, heard: "And keep Phyllis in bed. Take care of Phyllis, poor girl. Doc, take care of Phyllis—"

Phyllis Meadows took her turn at fainting. When she awoke she was on a cot beside the big bed where Jared lay stretched. Jared's blue eyes were regarding her. "I'll—I'll get up. I'll—I'll have your dinner ready—"

"Lie down!" came in a terse command from her lord. "You take care of yourself. The doctors know what they're about."

Jared's eyes of that bright, unclouded blue that denotes a nature not given to softness, to concern for the woes of this world? Phyllis knew they would never seem so again. Strength that has known weakness has felt pity, is strength, indeed.

JARED, THE HARD BOILED

(By D. J. Walsh.)

JARED MEADOWS towered beside his wife's bed, scorn writ large in his attitude and on his handsome, ruddy face. His eyes of that bright, unclouded blue that denotes a nature not given to softness, to sentimental concern for the woes of this world dwelt briefly on his wife's recumbent figure and then turned in distaste away.

Phyllis Meadows, her small, delicate face turned toward the window, lay and regarded with unseeing eyes the country without. Her lips trembled and a flush crept up and burned into momentary rose her thin, pale cheek. Calmly, resolutely, Jared voiced his sentiments.

"Doctors are grafters. Keep people in bed and coddle 'em up to get their money. You've got to use your will power; make up your mind you're all right and you'll be all right. No, I don't hold with doctors. Why, I never had a doctor pawin' over me in all my life!"

Phyllis made no comment; continued to stare inertly upon the landscape. Jared expected her, the first day at home from the hospital after an emergency appendicitis operation, to plunge into housekeeping, to get his meals, wash the dishes, churn, bake, feed the chickens, yes, and probably hoe the turnips, she reflected bitterly. And you couldn't make big, strong Jared understand. You couldn't. Healthy, strong, candid, "sensible," he was simply unable to comprehend frailty. And she didn't want him to! His strength she adored. His intolerance of weakness seemed to her god-like. Attentively she listened as he went on.

"I sure never thought you would ever be the kind of woman to lie around and compel a busy man to wait on you."

"I'll—I'll try to get up and get something for your dinner," she murmured, and winked her eyelids to dispell the black dots from before her frightened eyes. Why, she couldn't. She couldn't. Yesterday a nurse had taken care of her. Today she had to take care of Jared. And they had told her it would be two months before she would be strong enough to take up her work at the point where she had laid it down. But she turned and smiled up at her blue-eyed Jared.

"That's my girl," Jared rewarded and she felt his lips upon her cheek, his hand firm upon her shoulder. "I've got a bushel of things to do today. Can't work on an empty stomach, you know. I told Tina Burwell she'd not need to hang around here any more. I told her you were no slacker. I paid her off and said she could skeddadle. I tell you the doctors do just like I said, coddle you up, keep you in bed. Why, how'd they make a living if folks wouldn't stay sick a while for 'em? You're all right, Phyllis. You're all right. Utter nonsense this business of being sick is. Well, I'll be getting to work. Good to have you home, old girl. Jehosophat! I missed you something awful!" Again Phyllis thrilled at the touch of his lips.

"Oh, I will try to do as he wants me to. He is so dear—big, old strong Jared," she whispered as she felt the little farmhouse shake at his march through it. The hours sped by. She dozed a few minutes now and again, but always was the dread upon her of the moment, eleven o'clock, when she must get up and begin preparation for Jared's dinner. And he could not do with just a lunch. Dear me. Fancy Jared Meadows coming in to cereal and milk and fruit and store cookies! Oh, he would despise her, never have any love for her again if she failed him. Ah, but hadn't the hospital been a heavenly place. All day she could lie still, all day and all day, resting, getting well, eating, drinking, thinking, dreaming, building up strength. At the hospital everybody had smiled at her, nurses had brought her things, brushed her hair, the doctors had been sympathetically interesting, kind, understanding. And she had been homesick. How could she have been, she asked, longing for the peace of the place. Well, she had been homesick for Jared, for this hale blue-eyed young giant who was her husband. Never once had she failed to cry when the sisters sang vespers and she knew night was coming down and she was alone in the big white-peopled place, far, far from Jared. In her mind now as she lay she dwelt upon his strength. Perhaps if she thought of his health and vigor it would help her to gain them for herself. She must have some will power as he suggested. "I—I stumbled," he hoarsely whispered, "over a—a pig. K-killed the pig, b-b-roke my leg—"

"Jared, Jared," she cried, "my dear—"

His lips moved again and she stooped to hear. "I—I crawled to the car to crank it and get to town and I broke my—my arm. "G-get the doctor!" a frightful groaning. "Get the doctor." He closed his eyes, went very white and slumped down upon the porch floor. Phyllis Meadows proved herself then. She did not think herself all right and then became all right. She simply forgot herself, forgot appendicitis operations, weakness. She flew to the telephone. She summoned a doctor, two doctors. She called Jared's mother from town. She turned down Jared's bed, put water on to heat. All this for Jared, her hard, glorious Jared, like a woman demon possessed, she did.

In half an hour the two doctors had arrived and tall Mrs. Meadows with her keen, clear blue eyes, like her son's eyes—yesterday. In another half hour Jared Meadows was in his bed, the doctors busied with the broken leg, with the broken arm. In another half hour Jared Meadows, in splints and multitudinous white bandages, lay inert and colorless. In another half-hour the blue of Jared Meadows' eyes was visible to his wife as she leaned over him, flushed and intent. His lips opened and she heard: "I fell awful—awful—"

"You're all right, Meadows," interposed one of the doctors cheerfully. "You'll be fit as a fiddle again in six weeks."

"No—no. Don't hurry me, doc—"

He lay silent for a moment. And then Phyllis, bending close, heard: "And keep Phyllis in bed. Take care of Phyllis, poor girl. Doc, take care of Phyllis—"

Phyllis Meadows took her turn at fainting. When she awoke she was on a cot beside the big bed where Jared lay stretched. Jared's blue eyes were regarding her. "I'll—I'll get up. I'll—I'll have your dinner ready—"

"Lie down!" came in a terse command from her lord. "You take care of yourself. The doctors know what they're about."

Jared's eyes of that bright, unclouded blue that denotes a nature not given to softness, to concern for the woes of this world? Phyllis knew they would never seem so again. Strength that has known weakness has felt pity, is strength, indeed.

ORCHARD GLEANINGS

WHEN HARD RIPE PICK APPLE CROP

Keeping Qualities of Fruit Depends on Ripeness.

Picking, handling and exhibiting apples may be summarized as follows: Produce the best quality of fruit possible. Pick it when it will make the highest quality and most attractive product. Handle carefully at all times and keep it as cool as possible after picking.

Apples should be picked for market when hard ripe. Hard ripe means that the fruits have not softened to any extent, but are mature enough that they will soften and become eating ripe after picking. Picked too late these fruits soften either on the tree or soon after picking, and as a consequence break down and decay. On the other hand, if picked too early, they have poor color and eating quality when they are eating ripe, and are more subject to diseases in transportation and storage.

There are limits on either side of the proper time to pick fruit. These are easy to recognize, and economic necessity forces fruit growers to observe them. Fruit should not be picked before it has attained fair size and color, because the grower cannot generally sell it to advantage. Fruit should not be left on the tree until it drops, for fallen fruit as a rule cannot be sold at a satisfactory price. For best results, fruits must be picked between these two stages. One of the best indications that apples are ripe enough to pick is the change of the ground color from green to yellow. Immature fruit is leaf green. Some varieties never have any red color, but most varieties develop more or less red color as they ripen. The green is called the ground color. The red, which appears later, is called the over color. When fruit is eating ripe, the green color has become yellow. This change begins, however, before the fruit is eating ripe, and about the time it is hard ripe. In general, the fruit is ready to pick when the green ground color takes on a tinge of yellow.

An instrument known as a fruit pressure tester is now being used to determine the hardness and softness of apples and other fruits. Growers and investigators have found its use valuable when supplemented by known characters of fruit ripening. The determination of the proper time to pick fall and winter apples is more difficult than is the case with summer apples. The different varieties offer different problems. Some varieties, of which Jonathan is an example, become hard, ripe relatively early; others ripen later. Some suffer in keeping quality if picked too late; other varieties keep if left on the tree until relatively late. Jonathans tend to soften on the tree and suffer from Jonathan spot and decay after picking if left too long. It is best to harvest them as soon as they have developed good size and color.

Old apple orchards are more profitable for their owners than young orchards, according to Prof. G. P. Scoville in a talk at the New York State College of Agriculture. Orchards set 50 to 70 years ago on good soil are paying a better income than those that have recently come into full bearing. Orchards on soil not suited to apples become poorer and poorer as they grow older. Professor Scoville said that the fruit grower has one great advantage even though his income does fluctuate. He gets used to living on the small income of poor years, so when a big year does come he spends the surplus to improve his farm and buildings or to pay off his mortgage. He believes that this, to a great extent, is the reason why many fruit growers get ahead.

Lighter Soil Is Favored for Northern Spy Trees The Northern Spy apple grows well on a soil that is not too heavy. The main problem with this variety seems to be to get it thoroughly matured. On soils that are slow or that delay the ripening of the fruit, it is an inferior product. Climate complicates the matter still further so that there are relatively few places in the country where Northern Spy is at its best. As for pollination, the Northern Spy is supposed to be one of the few varieties that will set fruit with its own pollen. Any variety, however, is benefited by having several varieties nearby for cross pollination.

Time of Picking The time of picking is an important item within the control of the grower which affects the susceptibility of the apples to scald. Early picked and poorly colored fruit is extremely susceptible, while well-colored, well-matured apples are more resistant to the disease. Color and maturity are influenced by the weather conditions, the pruning, the soil, the fertilizer, and the orchard management. Good exposure to sunlight makes the apples more resistant to scald.

Working Principle of Explosive Engine Old

The basic idea of the explosive engine was conceived long before the appearance of steam. In 1680 Huygens described an explosion motor which was to be operated by discharging a quantity of powder to drive the air out of a cylinder and raise the piston. To that point, his engine relied on a force somewhat similar to the working principle of those today, but the useful work was to be done by the piston being forced down by the pressure of the atmosphere against it, thus lifting a weight or doing some other task. There is no record that this engine ever was operated. The steam engine of 1705 functioned on about the same plan, that is, steam was used to lift the weight of the piston, and after this was done, the atmospheric pressure was relied upon for the real work. After Huygens, almost 100 years passed before inventors caught the vision of rotary motion from their engines. His idea simply involved a piston and a cylinder.

The Songs Our Soldiers Sing

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

EVER since the world began men have gone to war and, going, have sung songs. Among savages the singing of war songs was an essential part of the preparation for battle, but in so-called "civilized warfare," soldiers have lightened campaign hardships or camp life monotony by singing about their officers, their regiments, what they had to eat and the shelter, or lack of it, in which they slept, as well as any number of other details of their everyday life.

In this respect the soldiers of the American army, ever since there was such an institution, have been no different from the soldiers of other nations. What is a typical American soldier song? The answer is: there is no such thing! The type of song that was popular among our soldiers of one period, the soldiers of another war would scorn to sing. With but few exceptions, perhaps, the songs which were sung during one war are all but forgotten by the time another war comes along. For the soldier song is one of the most ephemeral things in the world.

Fortunately for our national balladry, there has recently been collected in one volume the greater part of our soldier songs "from Yankee Doodle to Parley Voo," which are published under the title of "Sound Off!" by the Cosmopolitan Book corporation of New York. The collector of these songs is Lieut. Edward Arthur Dolph of the United States Military Academy at West Point and two brother officers on the academy staff have co-operated with him in producing a piece of work which, aside from its inherent interest, has great historic value. They are Lieut. Philip Egner, teacher of music, who arranged the music for many of the songs in the book, and Lieut. Lawrence Schick, instructor in drawing, who made the illustrations.

In the foreword to the book, Peter B. Kyne, a veteran of the Spanish-American and World wars, makes the following comment: "A soldier song is, essentially, a song of the people. Its melody must be simple, the words either sad or humorous, and it must have a resounding chorus in which the tone-deaf can join without fear of discovery. It is for this reason that the most popular song of the World War was 'All We Do Is Sign the Pay Roll,' sung to the tune of 'John Brown's Body.' Then, too, it lent itself readily to improvisation. I remember a chief cook I had. He had a bellowing baritone and was one of the funniest men I ever knew. One day, after having passed through three British rest camps, this fellow suddenly roared forth: 'All we do is go to rest camps—' A joyous shout greeted this opening line. The men knew instantly what was coming and with mighty vigor, indeed, did they come in on the last line: 'And we never get a d—' bit of rest!" His song was a hit! The oldest American war ballad, according to Lieutenant Dolph, was "Lovewell's Fight," written about 1725 in commemoration of Captain Lovewell's victory over the Indians at Pig-wacket on May 8 of that year. Just before the Revolution the Americans frequently wrote ballads to express their ideas about tea and taxation. These ballads, however, were not nearly so popular among the soldiers of the Continental army as were songs which dealt with events of the war itself, such as the famous "Battle of the Kegs," "Mad Anthony Wayne," "Brave Paulding and the Spy,"

"Nearly all of these Revolutionary songs were sung to tunes borrowed from the British," says the author. "This was natural, for soldier songs are generally sung to old, well-known tunes, or to popular music of the day. . . . It was not until many years after the Revolution that we began to have a national music of our own." It is interesting to note that the one outstanding song of the Revolution, the one which has survived longest in popular knowledge and which was the basis for other songs during all our wars, down to and including the Civil war, was written originally by a British army surgeon. This was the famous "Yankee Doodle."

Here is the story of its origin as Lieutenant Dolph tells it: "In the summer or early fall of 1758, during the French and Indian war, a British army surgeon, Doctor Richard Shuckburgh, who had spent most of his time in America, was encamped with General Abercrombie on the old Van Rensselaer estate, near Albany. A number of provincial troops were mobilizing there. Their rustic appearance was so ludicrous that Doctor Shuckburgh, who was quite a wit, wrote a song about them and set it to an old tune which we now know as 'Yankee Doodle.'"

To the men who served in France a decade ago and sang of "Madelon," it may be a surprise to know that "Madelon" was a soldier's sweetheart long before the World War. In proof of that consider this stanza from a soldier song which appeared in one of the earliest American songsters and was probably sung in the War of 1812:

Could you to battle march away
And leave me here complaining?
I'm sure 't would break my heart to stay
When you are gone campaigning.
Ah, non, non, non!
Pauvre Madelon
Could never leave her lover!
Ah, non, non, non!
Pauvre Madelon
Would go with you all the world over.

Although the War of 1812 did not produce many soldier songs—mainly because the army didn't have much to boast about until near the end of the war! But there is one exception to this statement and it is "one genuine soldier song that will live as long as the republic—The Star Spangled Banner." For this product of the inspiration of a volunteer soldier, Francis Scott Key, has become our national anthem and had thrilled millions of

Old Superstition

During the Middle Ages the signs of the zodiac were supposed to influence human life and were distributed to different parts of the human body. Disease was supposedly cured by the aid of the zodiacal power presiding over that part of the body. The dominion of the moon over the body as she passes through the 12 signs of the zodiac is as follows: Aries, head and face (ram); Taurus, neck and throat

(bull); Gemini, arms and shoulders (twins); Cancer, breast and stomach (crab); Leo, heart and back (lion); Virgo, bowels and belly (virgin); Libra, reins and loins (balance); Scorpio, secret members (scorpion); Sagittarius, hips and thighs (archer); Capricornus, knees and hams (goat); Aquarius, legs and ankles (water bearer); and Pisces, feet and toes (fish).

A doctor is up against a stubborn case when his patient comes of a long-lived family.

Americans even though not one out of a hundred can sing it all the way through.

Unlike the Revolution and the War of 1812, the Mexican war produced no great outstanding song which has survived to the present time. In the main, this conflict saw the revival of the favorite songs of the two previous wars mentioned, although the soldiers, both volunteer and regular, seized up on the opportunity offered by various events in the Mexican campaigns to compose crude songs which were sung to familiar tunes.

"No other war in our country's history produced as many songs as the Civil war," says Lieutenant Dolph. "The struggle lasted so long and the feeling on each side was so intense that hundreds of songs of all degrees of merit appeared." Some of them seemed destined to be sung as long as the American nation lasts, for such songs as "Battle Cry of Freedom," "Dixie," "Battle Hymn of the Republic," "Bonnie Blue Flag," "Maryland, My Maryland," have become an essential part of the American tradition. "Not all of these songs were sung by the soldiers, however—nor were they intended to be," writes the author of "Sound Off!" "Many were wholly unsuitable for camp or marching songs, or were too far removed from the intimate details and stark realities of a soldier's daily life. . . . As a rule, sentimental songs were not in great favor. . . . As the first wave of feeling passed, and men settled down to the serious business of fighting, marching, sleeping in the mud and rain, and living on 'sow belly' and beans, their attention was more and more focused on the immediate details of their daily life. It was then that true soldier songs were born."

For it was at this time that the essential character of the American soldier began to assert itself—his ability to make a jest about danger and hardship and to seek an emotional outlet by singing satirically about himself and his uncomfortable life. That quality became even more apparent in the songs of the Spanish-American war and those of the Philippine insurrection. And it reached its full flower in the World War. The fact that "Hinky Dinky, Parley-Voo" is the outstanding survivor of the soldier songs sung "over there" reflects as nothing else can the spirit of the young man who took part in the Great Adventure of 1917-18. And lest anyone deplore the fact that the World War songs breathed none of the crusading spirit, let him consider these words of the author of "Sound Off!": "Perhaps, after all, it is a blessing that these soldier songs of '17 and '18 were light, non-sensical, and even bawdy. As long as soldiers sing these kinds of songs they do not become cynical and bitter, as did the French, Germans and English. The Americans came out of the war with the ability quickly to regain their normal perspective. No feeling of hate rankles in their breasts today. This fact alone is worth more than all the war songs that have ever endured."

First British Flyer Found

The first British subject to make the first flight in a heavier-than-air machine in the British isles has just been determined by a committee of three appointed by the Royal Aero club. It was Col. J. T. C. Moore-Brabazon, M. P. The flight was made at some time between April 30 and May 2, 1909. The airplane rose 50 to 80 feet, flew for a quarter to half a mile, and, turning, crashed, with no injury to the pilot, says the committee's report.

With the completion of a huge structure across the mouth of the Waal river, the Netherlands claim to have the longest truss bridge in the world. It is two miles long, and connects the cities of Dordrecht and Moerdijk. The bridge is made up of a series of spans of rigid steel framework, supported by massive piers rising from the river, which is very wide and shallow at that point.

Airplane Pilots Make Study of Bird Flights
New light on the height and speed at which birds fly, and upon bird migration, is being thrown by airplane pilots. Joint plans are being developed by bird societies and aeronautical associations to compile systematically such aerial observations of feathered folk.

It seems that birds are rarely sighted by airmen above a height of about 3,000 feet. Not long ago, however, one pilot reported seeing a couple of large birds, which he took to be eagles, at an altitude of more than 12,000 feet. It is believed that some birds, when on migrating flights, attain nearly 20,000 feet. Ornithologists are asking airmen to make special observations as to the speed at which birds fly. In one case, already on record, a pilot cruising at about 100 miles an hour, was approached by a number of swifts. These graceful birds not only overtook the airplane, but outstripped it with ease.

During the war pilots on patrol above the dunes of western Belgium often amused themselves by putting their airplanes against teal and mallard. Both these birds seemed capable of a speed of more than 100 miles an hour.

Can't Talk With Mars
Radio communication with Mars is considered unlikely, in the opinion of E. O. Hulburt of naval research laboratory, because of atmospheric conditions on the planet and because of certain limitations there, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. The gist of the situation, as he sees it, is that the short waves which we might transmit to penetrate our atmosphere, if they did reach Mars, would probably find no receiver for them, since the Martians, if they have radio sets, very likely have gone in for those using long waves.

The following definition of "engineering," designed to be general enough to include the various branches, has been proposed by Col. P. E. Ostrich Diamond Mines

Ostriches are shot down by professional hunters in South Africa and examined to see if they have hidden away in their anatomy anything like a gem. Two birds recently killed are said to have yielded a fortune—one had 53 and the other 17 diamonds. The ostriches plucked the gems from alluvial deposits.

Many have found that washing stockings with 20 Mule Team Borax and a mild soap saves money on their annual bill for hosiery. Borax softens water, aids soap and keeps stockings fresh and sweet smelling.—Adv.

THE NEW WAXFREE HAVOLINE

The greatest ANNOUNCEMENT ever made about OIL!

THIS is the announcement of the New Waxfree Havoline—made by the Govers Process.

The only paraffin base oil from which all wax has been removed.

For years, the oil industry has sought in vain to produce such an oil.

For months, the automobile industry has awaited this announcement.

Now the facts are published.

These facts are based upon definite figures—the specifications by which every oil expert judges oil, and these specifications are printed here.

What do these specifications prove? They prove that the New Waxfree Havoline (Govers Process) has better heat resistance than any other oil of the same viscosity at 210° F. and above—

- has better cold weather lubricating value than any other oil—
- remains "oily" at every temperature—

—is the only oil that meets all specifications for ideal lubrication.

The New Waxfree Havoline is not a blended oil.

Without a doubt, this is the greatest advance in oil refining since the automobile was invented.

The development of the New Waxfree Havoline has been long and dramatic. Scientists have been brought literally from the ends of the earth. A vast 400 acre refinery has been turned into a practical laboratory. Not with tiny retorts and test tubes—but with giant twin stills, built at a cost of $2,000,000, the new Govers Process was brought to perfection.

Get the New Waxfree Havoline (Govers Process) wherever Havoline Oils are sold. It retails at 35c a quart and is worth far more in engine protection.

WAX FREE

Wax turns water-thin under heat. Wax turns candle-hard under cold. Now, for the first time, you can get a waxfree paraffin base oil for the best year-round lubrication
