T. C. PUBLIC SCHOOLS WILL OPEN SEPT. 3

The opening of the school year will bring relief to some of the young people who find prolonged leisure burdensome and tedious. To others it will mean the added joy of the school atmosphere and environment. To some parents it will bring relief from the distraction of keeping the children occupied and entertained. To others it will mean heavy hearts when they see for the first time the school sharing with the home in the training of the child. The Tawas City Public Schools will open Tuesday, September 3 with the following instructors:
The superintendent, Arthur E. Giddings, holds a Life Certificate and the degree of Bachelor of Arts in Education from the Michigan State Normal College. He is also a graduate of the Michigan State College, having received a Smith-Hughes Life Certificate and the degree of Bachelor of Science from the latter institution. He has taken work during the summer in the Graduate School of the University of Michigan. The following year will be the third for Mr. Giddings in the local schools.

The high school principal, John R. Forsten, is a graduate of Hope College, and holds a Life Certificate and the degree of Bachelor of Arts from that institution. While a student there he specialized in mathematics, was a member of the college football and baseball teams, and the reserve basketball team. He will teach mathematics and coach athletics in the high school during the ensuing year. The coming year will be the third for Mr. Forsten in the local high school.

The commercial teacher, Mrs. Lurissa M. Forsten, is a graduate of the Michigan State Normal College, and holds a Life Certificate from that institution. She also has taken about a year of special training in commercial work at the Ferris Institute. This will be the third year for Mrs. Forsten in the local high school.

The English-Latin teacher, Miss M. Louise Crosby, is a graduate of the Central State Normal College and holds a Life Certificate from there. She has taken some work in the same institution in addition to the above. While in college, she specialized in English. Next year will be the third for Miss Crosby in our high school.

The grammar room teacher, Mr. Robert M. Bollinger of Carson City, received a Life Certificate from the Michigan Central State Teachers College of Mt. Pleasant in June, 1928, and taught in the Interior Township Public Schools during the past year. Mr. Bollinger comes to us with a very good scholastic and experience record, and we firmly believe that he will easily adapt himself to our school and community life.

The upper intermediate teacher, Miss Carmen Garberson of Marquette, Michigan, graduated from the Michigan Northern State Teachers College of Marquette in June, 1927, and was granted the degree of Bachelor of Arts at that time. Since then she has taught in the public schools of National Mine and Marquette.

The lower intermediate teacher, Miss Edna Hardies, holds a Life Certificate from the Michigan Central State Teachers College of Mt. Pleasant, and has taken some work toward a degree at the same institution. The following year will be the third for Miss Hardies to teach with us.

The primary position will be filled by Miss Ruth Morel of Kankakee, Illinois. Miss Morel received a Life Certificate from the National Kindergarten and Elementary College of Evanston, Illinois, in June, 1928. She has been teaching in the kindergarten department of the public schools of Glenwood, Iowa, during the past year. Miss Morel's record causes us to believe that she will cheerfully maintain the present high standard of the primary department.

The Ward teacher, Mrs. Emma Anschuetz, is a graduate of the local high school and county normal. She has taken considerable work at the Michigan State Normal College and holds a first grade certificate. The ensuing year will make her eighth in the Tawas City Public Schools.

Whittemore Public School opens on Monday, August 26. Students desiring information relative to their work for the year may consult the superintendent at his home or at the school.

She leaves to mourn her loss, seven children, Ida Shorts of Long Lake, Emma Wonsky of Mt. Pleasant, Ella Sholtz of Onaway, Phoebe Sholtz of Tawas City, Abe Conrad of Whittemore, Henry Conrad of Flint, Nancy Burley of Washington, two brothers, Charles Cowling and William Cowling of Ionia, two sisters, Jenny Horsely and Melissa Simmons of Lansing; 33 grandchildren, 29 great grandchildren, and other relatives and a host of close friends.

Mrs. Conrad was a good mother and will be greatly missed by all her children. In later years she became a member of the Free Methodist church of Rose City. The body was taken to Onaway for burial beside her husband.

NORMAN SIBLEY AGAIN WINS STATE CHAMPIONSHIP

Norman O. Sibley, Reno District 1, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Sibley of Taft, is winner of honorary state championship in 2nd year handicraft work in 1928-29. This is the second time Norman has won a state championship, he being state champion in first year work in 1925-26, when he received a two year scholarship to Michigan State College. This honorary state championship won by him this year carries with it no scholarship as only one boy, but it gives him rank as best in handicraft in his year's work in the state of Michigan. Mr. Samuel H. George, his teacher, is to be congratulated on the excellence of his training ability.

BETTER SIRE TRAIN HERE OCTOBER 3-4

Little sympathy will be shown for the scrub bull when the Dairy Sire Train makes its run through Northeastern Michigan over the Michigan Central Railroad and Detroit and Mackinac Railway the two weeks, beginning September 23. The schedule calls for a stop at East Tawas from 9:00 a. m. to 12:30 p. m. Thursday, October 3 and at Whittemore 9:00 a. m. to 12:30 p. m. Friday, October 4.

History records two great periods in American history: the passing of the Indian and the passing of the buffalo. When this Dairy Sire Train with its preliminary activities and follow-up work is completed, history will have to add another chapter to its book, namely the passing of the scrub sire.

It is common knowledge that the fastest road to a profitable dairy herd is through pure bred sire of known ancestry and high production. A dairyman does not need to spend a large amount of money buying a pure bred herd. If he will select a good pure bred bull and use it in his herd of good grade cows and eliminate the low producers through Dairy Herd Improvement Association records, he will soon be on the road to profitable dairy production.

Only a very few of the hundreds of thousands of dairy farmers have entire pure bred dairy herds, according to E. N. Hansen, Bull specialist, Michigan State College, but it is hard for many of us to believe that less than one-fourth of the dairymen are using a pure bred bull. In other words, about three-fourths of the dairy farmers have a scrub or grade bull at the head of their herds. With this condition existing, it will be a long time before the farmers of Northeastern Michigan can prevent the importation of 60,000 pounds of butter fat into Michigan yearly with a value totaling thirty millions of dollars.

When the Dairy Sire Train passes through this territory in October owners of every scrub bull in the territory will have an opportunity to trade this scrub for a pure bred of high production records. No animal whose dam produced less than 100 pounds of butter fat per year will be taken along on this train and there will be many with records higher than this. Plan now to take part in all the preliminary activities and visit the Train when it traverses this territory.

FAIRBANKS' 'IRON MASK' SUPREME ACHIEVEMENT

Do you want to see and hear a truly magnificent picture with a powerful story, interesting people and superb settings?

Do you want to forget the humdrum "now" and spend an hour or two in the romantic "then" of the seventeenth century France, when kings and cardinals moved through stately palaces, and an iron masked captive paced the stone floor of an island fortress?

Do you want to see D'Artagnan, brought to vivid life by Douglas Fairbanks, riding with his three loyal musketeers, Athos, Porthos, and Aramis, upon their quest for romance and adventure?

Then you must see and hear "The Iron Mask," the latest Fairbanks picture, which opened last night at the State Theatre and continues today (Friday) and Saturday.

The settings of the picture are marvels of authentic realism, and the characters might have stepped from the pages of history. The story moves with breathless speed from the birth of the royal heir to his rescue from his fortress prison and his restoration to his throne. The swords of the four musketeers, joined in a brotherhood which death cannot ever, flash in defense of their kings.

The story ends on the same stirring note with which it begins. You will never forget that final moment when, with swords raised in their stirring salute, "One for all, all for one," the four friends go together in search of the further adventures which lie beyond.

Miss Mable Myles of this city, Miss Ila Carter and Miss Brown of Harrisville left Monday on a motor trip to Kentucky.

MUCH INTEREST SHOWN IN GOLF TOURNAMENT

Baseball, football or basketball all depend on team play. In contrast, if any game played the world over relies on individuality, that game is golf. No competitor can make or alter the score you turn in at the close of golf play. Every minute you are the dictator and master of your stroke. All depends on you.

This, in short, introduces in our community a new species, what the layman terms the "golf bug".
Again, many a mother has wondered where young "Johnny" is spending his summer days. He, also, has been bitten by the bug and joined the ranks of "caddyhood," sitting down his fees for winter mending. This is just another phase of what golf does for the community.

So, all this, in short, leads to what is percolating at the Tawas Golf Club, sponsoring its first championship flight. Let the score cards in the elimination series shout for themselves.

LOCAL BOYS RETURN FROM FORT BRADY

Waldo Leslie, Reginald Boudler, Forest McCaskey, Carlton Merschel, Norman Schuster, Carl Babcock and Charles Colby, the seven "soldiers," arrived home Saturday after a very exciting month of training at Camp Robert S. Welsh, Ft. Brady.

First call in the morning was sounded at 5:30, followed five minutes later by Reveille. "Sitting up" exercises were next for all those who didn't remain in their bunks. (Some tried this, but it didn't last.) Breakfast came at 6:00. From then until 7:30, bunks had to be made and tents cleaned up for inspection. The rest of the morning was spent in drill, and the school of the soldier. In the afternoon everyone had to turn out for athletics. At 4:30 came formation for "retreat." Supper was served at 5:30, after which the boys were free until "taps" at 10:00. Failure to be in at 10:00 meant extra K. P., but some of the boys seemed to think it was worth it to be out another hour.

Five days were spent at the rifle range, where skill in marksmanship was shown. Carl Babcock and Charles Colby tied for second high score, firing 91 points out of a possible 100. Reginald Boudler of Company "M" fired highest score among the basics with a score of 153 out of a possible 200. The rest of the boys from here showed exceptional skill with the machine gun.

All have unanimously voted to go back next year, if possible, and would like to see more boys from Tawas there.

SECURE MANY ATTRACTIONS FOR IOSCO FAIR

With a staff of officials that are experienced pilots, the Iosco county fair promises this year to be one of the best ever held in the county. The management is putting forth every effort to secure exhibits that will be a credit to the fair.

Indications are that the new cattle barn will be filled to capacity. We are also assured of a good poultry show. On account of the unusual season, the vegetable exhibit may not be so large, but there will be the usual large exhibit of fine arts, domestic arts, school work, etc.

You will be entertained in every way possible. A number of free acts have been secured; a band of eighteen or twenty pieces; ball games and horse races.

There will be the fireworks display in the evening, which has become a great attraction to the night fair. Lew Henry's big carnival of rides, shows and concessions will fill the midway. The new entrance at the east end of the grounds will help to eliminate the congestion at the gate. It is hoped that everyone will avail himself of the opportunity to enjoy all three days of the fair, September 5, 6 and 7.

EAST TAWAS DEFEATS HARRIS TRUCKERS SUNDAY

East Tawas trampled over the fast Harris Truckers of Bay City last Sunday at East Tawas by a score of 13 to 6.

Stan Noel led the hitting attack of the East towners with two home runs and a triple, three of the 15 hits made by East Tawas. The Truckers gathered a total of nine hits off Oxel Johnson, local hurler.

In the field the teams were fairly well matched. However, after the East Tawas boys broke loose in the third and sixth innings, in which they got four and three runs, respectively, they had the game safely stored away.

The following is the box score of the East Tawas-Harris Truckers' game:

"ALIBI," ULTRA-MODERN ALL-DIALOGUE SCREEN THRILLER

Marking the most forward step yet made in the new art of talking and sound pictures, "Alibi," United Artists all-dialogue underworld thriller, is coming to the State Theatre Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday.

No motion picture in recent years has aroused as much enthusiasm from audiences as "Alibi," for it gives an entirely new conception of sound film technique, offers the most thrilling plot of any underworld story, and presents the greatest array of stage favorites ever assembled in one production.

In making "Alibi," the first all-talking thriller to come out of the huge United Artists studios in Hollywood, Roland West, the director, was particularly well equipped for the job, for he enjoyed years of experience as a stage actor, playwright and producer before he pioneered in the films. In "Alibi" he also had the advantage of using the world's most modern talking picture plant, recently completed on the United Artists lot, and a cast of stage favorites, every one of whom has a voice that registers perfectly.

Among the players in "Alibi" are Chester Morris, former New York stage star, whose performance in his first picture may make him a screen star overnight; Eleanor Griffith, another New York star who has never before appeared on the screen; Pat O'Malley, Mae Busch, and others of note.

Little Journeys in Americana

The Legend of Manabozho

MANABOZHIC is the creator of the earth and the giver of many fine gifts to man, if the legend of the Algonquins is correct. Manabozho created the earth by taking a grain of sand in his fingers and manipulating it. He was a very wonderful man.

All of the mastodons, the saber-toothed tigers, the dinosaurs and various other fierce and enormous prehistoric animals, whose bones or fossils are sometimes found, were slain by Manabozho. Manabozho manufactured the Great Lakes. They were his beaver ponds.

After watching the spiders build their webs to trap flies in, Manabozho got a bright idea. He made similar webs and so invented the first net for catching fishes. Besides making the earth, Manabozho also made the sun and the moon.

The next time you look upon the haze of the Indian summer, recall this: Manabozho made the Indian summer. He did it by blowing smoke from his pipe over the face of the world. That is the reason for the blue-smoky appearance of the atmosphere in late autumn. The tobacco has a soothing influence and Manabozho, as he smokes in Indian summer, goes off into a long, deep sleep.

Manabozho once went fishing for the king of fishes, but this great fish came and swallowed him, canoe and all. But Manabozho was smart. As he went down the fish's throat, he set his canoe crosswise in it, and while the fish labored to dislodge it he killed the fish.

This great fish drifted ashore with Manabozho in its throat. He could not get out until the gulls came and picked a hole in the fish. He crawled out through the hole.

Manabozho also discovered that if one tapped the maple tree and boiled down the sap he would have maple sugar. So maple sugar is another gift of Manabozho to man. Manabozho also dug the channels through which the rivers flow and he invented picture writing and Meda worship.

Meda worship was a sort of ritual among the Indians. Some have said that it was much like Free Masonry. Others think it more like the modern fraternity. Probably it was more than these. It combined secret initiation with religious rites. Meda worship spread to many tribes. It had its signs and its hand clasps.

One brother, recognizing another among his enemies in battle, might spare his life. I shall tell you more about Meda worship in another chapter. It still exists among the Indians of some of our tribes.

Manabozho is said to have been born somewhere in the vicinity of the Straits of Mackinac. Just how he came to be born at this particular spot on a world which he later made from a grain of sand is not wholly explained. But that is a mere detail.

Much of his life he spent in a handsome tepee in which lived his two wives. Once when away hunting he caught in a tree and could not get down. The wolves came and gathered around the tree and laughed at him in his helplessness. Finally a bear came and freed him. When he got home to his wigwam he gave both of his wives a thorough beating because they did not come to help him.

Manabozho was also a swift traveler. He could take six leagues at a step. It was nothing for him to saunter to the Rocky mountains or the Pacific for a brief outing. Of recent years he no longer lives in the vicinity of the Great Lakes which he once loved so well.

Now he resides somewhere in the Arctic on a great cake of ice. Of course, Manabozho does not take the place of God with the Indians. Some say that the Indians, until white man came, had no idea of a single God. Their gods numbered the thousands. They were everywhere.

Manabozho was merely an important god among the many. If you will analyze the legends that have been woven about him, you will find in him a bit of the Creator, a bit of Jack the Giant Killer, some Santa Claus, a touch of Jonah and a pinch of Yankee inventiveness. He might also be said to have been a lodge organizer and a wife-beater.

He was painted as a heroic figure about the campfires of all the Algonquins, which included the Ojibways, Pottawatomes, Illini and many other groups, including all the New England and many of the Atlantic coast tribes.

Southern Dialects

As to whether the southern dialect was the same in the Colonial period as it is now, Dean Addison Hibbard of the University of North Carolina says that it is impossible to give a dogmatic reply. First of all, there are many different dialects in the South today. There are, for instance such obviously different groups as the mountain dialect, the dialect of the coastal islands along the Atlantic seaboard, and again such modified forms as appear in Louisiana and the Gulf coast. In the colonial period he thinks the situation was somewhat similar—that is, there were various dialects in the various parts of the South depending on the nature of the settlers in the particular region under consideration.

WHEN BILLY WAS KIDNAPED

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

MRS. BARRETT sat on her wide porch knitting a sweater out of gold-colored yarn. It was intended to embellish a new golf costume in which she accompanied her banker husband to the links at the Country club, where he got most of his much needed exercise. Like her husband, Mrs. Barrett was stout and florid, a condition which came from having plenty of ease, a good cook in the kitchen and an unlimited credit at Mr. Houtchan's superior grocery store.

Very comfortable and fair looked Mrs. Barrett as she sat knitting this delightful summer afternoon, while the honeysuckles threw off their golden perfume and the bees hummed and her three-year-old son, William, Jr., plied up and down the lawn in his expensive new automobile, painted green and fully equipped, save for motor power, which Billy's stout legs supplied. Mrs. Barrett had Billy where she could keep an eye on him for the reason that she lived in a continual fear of his being kidnaped.

It was Miss Stowe who had put the idea in Mrs. Barrett's head. Ideas usually had to be put in Mrs. Barrett's head; they did not grow there. Miss Stowe lived alone in the pretty house opposite, and she hadn't a thing in the world to do but to hear her parrot swear and watch her neighbors. She was sure that the child of Westmore's banker would sooner or later be in danger of the kidnaper and, had so announced to Mrs. Barrett. As a consequence Mrs. Barrett kept her eye on Billy every moment that Avis, the reliable $10-a-week maid did not.

The telephone bell rang and Mrs. Barrett ran in to answer it. It was Miss Stowe, who had just read something dreadful in the Tatler and wanted to know if Mrs. Barrett had seen it. Those dreadful Serjes had bought the house where they lived and Gordon street had them permanently. Now wasn't that sad tidings? The Serjes were quite beyond the pale of banker's families and moneyed old maids. There were six children and the father watched the Bell street crossing and the mother was a good-natured slattern who didn't know a thing about sanitation. It was awful, horrible, shocking to have such folks in the neighborhood. "I knew when Jennie Pratt went away and left her house to be rented that trash would get into it. And now we've got them forever," cried Miss Stowe passionately. "Until they came there wasn't any objectionable feature here on Gordon street, not a dog, not a cat, only dear little Billy and Honeydew, and I'm sure Honeydew is harmless enough." Honeydew was the parrot.

Five minutes later, when Mrs. Barrett returned to the porch, Billy was nowhere to be seen. His green auto stood empty.

She called, she hunted, she got Avis to call and hunt. Miss Stowe saw what was going on and came running out. Billy gone? Kidnaped! Of course. At that Mrs. Barrett had hysterics. Mr. Barrett was out of town, she hadn't an available relation or a friend nearer than Miss Stowe—Miss Stowe sent for the police. They came, gorgeously panoplied. Westmore's entire force, four crowded into a borrowed roadster. They beat through the shrubbery, they looked into the pond, they asked questions. Who had seen Billy last? Hazel Peters said she had seen a little red car going like everything, swoop through the street a moment before the alarm was given. Mrs. Cryden said she had heard a scream. Old Mr. Mitt said that a mysterious car had kept its headlights turned on the Barrett house for ten minutes the night before. Little Carrie Wade, pie-eyed with imagination, said a queer-looking man had walked past the Barrett house three times that morning. The consensus was that Billy had been kidnaped for ransom. Mr. Barrett was notified by telegraph, extra police were called. Mrs. Barrett went to bed in a collapse and Dr. Hilton, arriving in haste, administered bromide and strychnine.

They searched far and near without avail. Miss Stowe enjoyed the first real excitement for years; after Mrs. Barrett she was the center of attraction. Honeydew swore to empty ears; he capered on his perch, beat his wings, stood on his head with rage while his mistress, with folded arms, held audience on the front steps.

Hours passed. Afternoon arrived and the Tatler was just ready to get out an extra edition with dazzling headlines. "Son of Banker Disappears!" Five times had young Boyd Walters, reporter for the Tatler, appeared on Gordon street to gather news. Avis, swollen faced with weeping and incoherent, told all she knew. Miss Stowe told much more than she knew.

Three o'clock brought Mr. Barrett, scarlet and dripping with perspiration. His high-nosed car was splashed with mud, for he had sought every possible short cut. He barely looked at his morning wife. Being efficient, he went to the telephone and called up the Tatler office and the chief of police. Half an hour later, damp from the press, startling lettered bills appeared in several public places. "$1,000 Reward!"

About that time a swarthy, tubby woman in a faded blue dress appeared in Gordon street. She ambled casually by Miss Stowe's with a wide white-toothed smile. Obviously she was looking for somebody.

"It's that awful Serge woman," Miss Stowe said to the little group on her steps. They looked after her scornfully. "What can she want on this street?"

The Serge woman ambled down and ambled back. Then Miss Stowe overhauled her.

"Who are you looking for?" she demanded.

"That man's house where the lil' boy got lost," returned Mrs. Serge amiably.

"What for?"

"Oh, 'cause." Mrs. Serge broadly grinned.

"Do you suppose she knew anything?" asked Mrs. Lippitt.

"How could she?" Miss Stowe sniffed. She pointed. "That's the house over there."

The woman went to the front steps, changed her mind and went around to the back door. An instant later Avis' voice was heard ascending in a shriek. Still another instant and Mr. Barrett dashed out of the house and plunged into his waiting car; he waited only long enough for the Serge woman to take a seat beside him before he broke the speed limit in his flight.

Ten minutes later he returned with the missing child. A waving of handkerchiefs and cries of joy went up from the group on Miss Stowe's steps. All the same they were disappointed.

Billy Barrett had been found. In fact he had never been lost at all. Lacking society, and freed from an instant from his mother's watchful eye, he had wandered forth in search of some one to play with. He had come to the little house beside the crossing where Mr. Serge kept watch, had strolled in and finding it impossible to understand Mr. Serge's jargon or for Mr. Serge to understand his he had promptly gone to sleep. He had awakened refreshed and had had his dinner from Mr. Serge's pail—dark looking bread and onions and a ripe red pepper. When Mr. Serge's "trick" came to a close he had taken Billy home with him and he had been having the time of his life playing with the smaller Serjes when Mr. Serge, who had gone to the news-stand after some tobacco, had seen the poster—"$1,000 Reward!" He had hurried home to tell Mrs. Serge and she had fared forth to the bankers, discreetly keeping Billy in the background meanwhile.

And that was all there was to the kidnaping of Billy Barrett except that Mr. Barrett really paid the $1,000 to Mr. Serge, who refused to take it.

"Na—Na! Me like lil fella, na—na!" protested Mr. Serge.

But Mr. Barrett insisted and it was Mrs. Serge who finally took the money. The $1,000 gave them their home free and clear. And because they were simple, kindly, honest folk who minded their own business, even Miss Stowe had to admit that she did not begrudge them their good fortune.

Diamond Only Precious

Stone Formed of Carbon

Among Biblical references to gems are many interesting passages. The vesture of the high priest, ornamented with symbolic stones, was made "for beauty and for glory." The ephod of Aaron contained two onyx stones engraved with the names of the 12 tribes of Israel. In the Apocalypse of the New Testament there is a description of the New Jerusalem as follows: "And the building of the wall it was of jasper, and the foundations of the wall of the city they were garnished with all manner of precious stones." In the Iliad and the Odyssey there are passages describing the jewels of Juno, and in modern times the display of gems at social functions often equals in splendor the magnificence of ancient Rome.

It is worthwhile to know something about the origin of these highly esteemed objects. In the first place, all precious stones are transparent, or at least translucent, although it is impossible to distinguish absolutely between common precious stones and ordinary stones, as the processes of nature are always gradual. The finer stones are called oriental, and the inferior ones occidental. This classification is solely a distinction of quality and has nothing to do with the regions in which they are found.

The reason for the distinguishing characteristic of transparency or translucency is that precious stones are formed through the agency of heat or water. The majority are of silica or alumina, the diamond only being formed from carbon. These stones are found among igneous rocks which have been pushed up from the earth's interior in a plastic state, ground down through ages of glacial periods into irregular peaks and cones, and reduced to sand by the disintegrating influence of ice and floods. They are rarely found among great masses of rocks, the destructive agencies to which the latter have been subjected being evidence of their great age. In fact, these much-desired stones are far older than plants, animals or man.—Washington Star.

GROW FERTILIZER IN HOME ORCHARD

Growth of Trees Depends on Plant Food and Moisture.

Too many fruit growers depend entirely upon commercial fertilizers such as nitrate of soda and sulphate of ammonia to supply plant food to their orchards. According to H. R. Niswonger, extension horticulturist at the North Carolina State college, these nitrates will maintain growth for a while but in the end some form of green manure must be turned under.

"The growth and fruitfulness of a tree depends largely upon the plant food and moisture content of the soil and this can be maintained by the use of cover crops," states Mr. Niswonger.

During the past year 250 apple growers and 150 peach growers have planted sweet clover and vetch in their orchards for soil improvement purposes. The vetch was sown last August at the rate of 15 pounds to the acre and the sweet clover sown spring at the rate of 15 to 20 pounds per acre. The vetch was turned under early this spring with just enough plants left for reseeding.

Mr. Niswonger states that sweet clover in the apple orchard can be handled like a permanent sod mulch. During the seeding season, the growth should be cut twice. First, when the blossom heads begin to form and again after the seed is made. These cuttings should then be raked under the branches for a mulch. Due to the difficulty of working with farm machinery, sweet clover is recommended for apple orchards, but where it is possible to use such machinery, vetch could be used to advantage.

Since fruit trees respond readily to the use of inorganic nitrates, a few pounds of this material should be applied to each tree even where the cover crops are grown. The amount to be applied can be determined by the grower through a study of the annual twig growth and fruitfulness of the tree.

Grape Hoe for Narrowing Rows Better Than Plow

The use of a grape hoe for narrowing the rows seems to be a decided improvement over the plow. This method was developed and used at the Ohio experiment station for the first time in 1928. About half of each row, always the same side of each row, is sliced off with the grape hoe. The grape hoe lays up the plants between the rows in such a manner that they may be gathered up much more readily than when a plow is used to narrow the rows. Then, by running a cultivator between the rows, the soil can be put into excellent condition for rooting of runners. The plate of the grape hoe should be sharp so that it will penetrate to a depth of about one and one-half inches; if the plate is dull or the soil is not in the best of condition for working it may be necessary to tie a weight, such as a heavy stone, on it.

Pick Up Peach "Drops" to Destroy Parasites

As peach drops are heavily infested with curculio "worms," growers are strongly urged to pick up these drops. A heavy second brood of "worms" may ruin the fruit as it ripens if the infested drops are not destroyed.

Experiments conducted by the United States peach insect laboratory at Fort Valley, Ga., show that three collections of dropped peaches will eliminate about 90 per cent of all curculio "worms" that fall during the season in drops. A special effort should be made to collect all the smaller drops, as these are the ones most likely to contain curculio "worms." All drops should be destroyed as soon as collected, by burying in a trench at least 18 to 24 inches below the surface of the soil. A layer of quicklime should be placed over them before filling in with soil.

Horticultural Hints

Proper pruning of apple trees means higher yields.

When fruits are eaten raw none of the vitamin content is lost.

While there must be good drainage, there are times in the growth of the black raspberry that it needs plenty water, but this can be had if the soil is of a sandy or clay loam and well cultivated.

Apple trees need an abundance of nitrogen early in the spring when the leaves are expanding.

The Burbank variety is an early-ripening cherry of good size, characters which are highly appreciated in this fruit.

Wet seasons, as every apple grower knows, are much more serious for blotch than are dry ones, but under even better than a normal season, blotch will be bad enough to be injurious on the varieties mentioned.

Volcanoes Keep Oceans Salt

Honolulu.—The 485 known volcanoes of the world, discharging every year more than a hundred million tons of hydrochloric acid, supply the chlorine that keeps the ocean salty.

chloric acid gas needed. Even the great Hawaiian volcano Kilauea, the steam of which contains only a trace of the gas, contributed something like 30,000 tons a year, Doctor Jaggard said.

Doctor Jaggard also explained the presence of calcium carbonate, which is the same as marble, in sea water.

"This is secreted from the water in the body of globigerina, a tiny organism ceaselessly dying and depositing billions of skeletons that make chalk on the ocean bottom. Locally the ocean floor is built up a foot per annum. Ten thousand years would shoal the ocean; but there have been millions of years, and the ocean is still deep.

"But though globigerina is everywhere in the upper waters, two-thirds of the sea bottom has no chalk. What could account for chalk banks being absent? The chalky bottoms are where the ocean is not so deep. It was found by Dr. J. Stanley Gardner, professor of zoology at Cambridge university, that where the ocean is more than two and a half miles deep, where the pressure approaches three tons per square inch, sea water can readily dissolve the chalk skeletons.

INTRIGUING LACE COLLARS; KNITTED ENSEMBLE FOR FALL

THAT persistent call of the feminine for accessories of lovely lace and lingerie is to be satisfied to the fullest this season.

All sorts of oddly shaped collars and capes, scarfs, cuffs, jabots and what not have received the overwhelming endorsement of Paris couturieres. Wherefore it follows that the quest of fashionable women leads more directly to neckwear displays, than it has for many a moon.

succeeded in capturing all the intriguing details known to couturiers art, and to the wonder and admiration of the fashionable world, is interpreting them to a point of fascination via knitted machinery which seems almost human in its achievements.

Speaking of the new knitted ensembles for fall, their colorings were never more alluring—each costume a color masterpiece! Browns are played in every key. Tobacco, chocolate, coffee and the lighter tones are interworked with all the radiant autumn yellows, tangerine shades, gold and rose tints.

things, for there's everything to choose from ranging from chic collar and cuff sets to the most elaborate and unique lace fancies.

Perhaps interest centers most about the graceful lace shoulder capes, such as is shown at the top in this group. This winsome accessory imparts a magic touch of beauty to even the simplest frock. It is made of a fine all-over patterning bordered with exquisite Alencon lace.

Embroidered ecru georgette finished about with Alencon lace describes the model below to the left. It is a noticeable fact that the majority of this season's lace fantasies are in ecru and egg-shell tints rather than pure white.

Favor for fichu lace effects is expressed with enthusiasm. The pretty fichu-like collar in the picture is also of all-over and Alencon lace.

Jabots and tabs are often artfully introduced in connection with lingerie collars. The adoption of Peter Pan lines for the collar is often remarked white vogue is reflected in the knitted realm with flattering results. The sports ensemble in the lower picture is fashioned of a black-and-white knitted fabric. With consummate art the colorist complements this black-and-white plaited effect with a blouse of rose-colored jersey. And if you wish to vary the program substitute for this rose-hued slipover one in pale blue for the alliance of "baby blue" with black or black and white is one of the promised color delights for fall.

The length of the coat for this costume invites comment, for it establishes a new trend—that of the coat which is not short, neither is it unduly long.

Fancy jersey cloth is conspicuously featured in advance modes, not only gay printed modernistic patternings, likewise plaids and checks, but very cunning flowery prints are finding their way into the knitted realm.

Much embroidery is being lavished on the new jersey frocks and in connection with jersey ensembles. The angora embroidered jersey blouse is a striking new item.

In connection with fanciful jabots of lace and the effect is very youthful. Cleverly designed collars and cuffs of colorful georgette with emphasis placed on novelty for the cuffs, make up a goodly percentage of the season's accessories.

All signs point to a most outstanding knitted season. A baffling thing about modern knitted apparel is that that which is knitted does not always appear as if knitted. One has to look twice and sometimes oftener to be certain whether this or that is really knitted, or whether it has been stylized of wool-and-warf fabric.

And the jersey peasant frocks, all smocked and embroidered, and exploiting a wealth of color are sure to prove a lure to youth. Of course, the knitted jersey of which these are made is just as dainty and lightweight as any silk or wool fabric and it smocks beautifully. There's no reason why the ambitious girl of limited means should not buy a few yards of jersey and fashion one of these embroidered and smocked dresses at a great saving.

Big Snake Stirs Up Hospital

New York.—This is a snake story to keep one up nights—and sober. It was brought into New York by Allan A. Lonberg, president of the Grace line.

The Grace line Santa Rita, on which Lonberg was a passenger from Valparaiso, Chile, put in on July 7 at the port of Guayaquil, Ecuador. Mr Lonberg went ashore.

Shortly before midnight he heard a tremendous clamor in the town. Police were called out, the militia thronged down the narrow streets, fire engines clanged over the cobbles.

Mr. Lonberg followed the procession to the edge of town, where the jungle begins and where is located the Civil hospital.

A ten-foot boa constrictor had glided out of the undergrowth and made its entrance into the hospital through a window. Gliding down corridor after corridor, it made its way to the cripples' ward. Night lights were burning. Some one screamed.

Then, all at once, there was panic and shrieks of fright and hysteria. The snake had attacked a male nurse. The cripples, many of them bedfast for months, leaped from their beds and fled on newly vitalized limbs to the windows.

One man who had been paralyzed for more than two years jumped six feet, from his bed to a window and another eight feet to the hospital's patio.

Doctors examining him later, believed him cured. His had been a hysterical paralysis.

The police and militia killed the snake.

Where Bacteria Can't Exist

Berlin.—In the polar sea lies an island which has been found to be absolutely free of bacteria, according to a writer in the Review, a scientific and technical journal. The article tells of exhaustive tests made on the island, the name of which is Nowaja Semlja, by a representative of the Central Geophysical observatory of Leningrad.

Polar air has long been known to be exceedingly pure, but until the Leningrad institute undertook its expedition to Nowaja Semlja, the extent of its purity had never been exactly measured. Dr. Kasansky, who headed the party, spent an entire winter on the island and in that time was unable to discover a single bacterium. Air, water, soil, dust, and even the flesh of wild animals which had been shot by hunters, were all tested and found to be germ-free, the writer asserts.

As a part of the experiments a certain gelatinous substance, upon which bacteria usually thrive, was left in the open air for several hours and then later heated in a brooding device, but not a single germ could be found. When gelatine of this sort is left exposed to the air of the ordinary big city it becomes so thickly covered with bacteria colonies within 15 minutes that the bacteria can not be counted. Fresh meat was left in the open for eight months, being subjected to all kinds of weather, and at the end of this period there was not the slightest trace of putrefaction.

Los Angeles, Calif.—Left-handedness is an inheritable characteristic and not merely a chance acquisition, according to Prof. Catherine Beers of the University of Southern California.

Zoology students working with Miss Beers have been studying left-handedness for two years and tracing its occurrence in families of the last three generations. Out of 1,398 individuals the students found that 12.3 per cent were left-handed. When the families of these 12.3 per cent were investigated, left-handedness was found to occur in about 25 per cent of the number.

There is a two-in-five chance that the children of left-handed parents will show this characteristic, the students found. In only about 7 per cent of the cases of left-handedness was the individual the only member of the family to have this characteristic.

FORBIDDEN THINGS

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

It was Jens Baggesen, a great Danish poet of the Eighteenth century, who tells of a friend of his—rich, strong, educated, able to do anything or have anything he desired—who was quite miserable and unhappy because his physician had denied him the use of coffee.

"If history is to be believed," Baggesen says, "Adam possessed all the advantages and comforts, all the necessities and luxuries a first man could demand. Among ten thousand pleasures, the fruit of one single tree was forbidden him. Good-by, content and peace! Good-by forever all his bliss."

"As we do not know the nature of the fruit which Adam could not do without, it may as well have been coffee as any other. That it was pleasant to the eyes means no more than that it was forbidden. Every forbidden thing is pleasant to the eyes.

"Of what use is it all to me?" said Adam looking around him in Eden, at the rising sun, the blushing hills, the light green forest, the glorious waterfall, the laden fruit trees, and, most beautiful of all, the smiling woman—"of what use is it all to me, when I may not taste this—coffee bean?"

It is the forbidden which tempts us most, which seems most desirable. I have been reading a lot of folk stories and fairy tales lately, and it is the closed door, the locked cabinet, the mysterious chamber which invariably gets somebody into serious trouble. Tell an otherwise sensible and clever boy that he must not do some particular thing on pain of death, and immediately he is hell bent to try it; tell him that he must, and he loathes it.

"Naughty, naughty," Smith says to his young son of tender years, who essays to touch his fingers to the hot stove. "Mustn't touch; burn baby," he warns. But forbidden things are alluring. Curiosity gets him into its grip. He walks about the fascinating mechanism with one eye on father and the other on the stove. Some day he is going to see what the consequences are if his fingers come into contact with the shining metal. He toddles off by himself shortly; there is a baby's shriek from the kitchen and he comes away with burned fingers, the penalty for meddling with forbidden things.

Mason, so far as I recall, had had no desire for liquor before the enactment of the prohibition law. He would have revolted against going into an open saloon, and if of an evening one of his respectable neighbors had offered him a drink from a hip flask, he would have been shocked, if not insulted. Why should a man fill himself up with hard liquor, he would have asked.

It is different now; the thing is forbidden, and so Mason has his favorite bootlegger. He stocks up with all sorts of inebriating concoctions. One cannot drop into his house for the briefest call without his bringing out glasses and a bottle, and not because he really likes liquor, but just because it is forbidden. "Aye, the Corn, the Royal Corn—"

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

NE upon a time a governor of the state of Illinois paid a tribute to one of the principal products of his state and his eulogy upon this principal source of her wealth has become a classic in American oratory. The governor was Richard J. Oglesby, his subject was corn and this is what he said about it:

But now again my mind turns to the glorious corn. See it! Look on its ripening, waving fields. See how it wears a crown, prouder than monarch ever wore, sometimes jauntily and sometimes, after the storm, the dignified survivors of the tempest seem to view a field of slaughter and to pity a fallen foe. And see the pendant caskets of the cornfield, filled with the wine of life, and see the silken fringes that set a form for fashion and for art.

And now the evening comes and something of a time to rest and listen. The scudding clouds conceal the half and reveal the whole of the moonlit beauty of the night. And then the gentle winds make heavenly harmonies on a thousand-thousand harps that hang upon the borders and the edges and the middle of the field of ripening corn, until my heart seems to beat to the rising and the falling of the long melodious refrain. The melancholy clouds sometimes make shadows and hide its aureate wealth; and now they move, and slowly into sight there comes the golden glow of promise for an industrious land.

Glorious corn, that more than all the sisters of the field wears tropic garments. Not on the shores of Nilus or of Ind does nature dress her forms more splendidly. My God, to live again that time when for me half the world was good and the other half unknown. And now again the corn that in its kernel holds the strength that shall (in the body of man refreshed) subdue the forest and compel victorious progress every stubborn field, or shining in the eye of beauty make blossoms of her cheeks and jewels of her lips and thus make for men the greatest inspiration to well-doing, the hope of companionship of that sacred, warm and well-embodied soul, a woman.

Aye, the corn, the royal corn, within whose yellow heart there is of health and strength for all the nations! The corn triumphant, that with the aid of man hath made victorious progress across the tufted plain and laid foundation for the social excellence that is and is to be. The glorious plant transmuted by the alchemy of God, sustains the warrior in battle, the poet in song and strengthens everywhere the thousand arms that work the purposes of life. Oh, that I had the voice of song or the skill to translate into tones and harmonies, the symphonies and raptures that roll across my soul when standing sometimes by night upon the borders of this verdant sea. I note a world of promise and then before one-half the year is gone I view its full fruition and see its heaped gold await the need of man.

Although Iowa boasts that she is the "state where the tall corn grows" not all of the "skyscraper stalks" are to be found there, as witness the above scene from California. The stalk which this western farmer is measuring is 13 feet, 5 inches high.

Majestic, fruitful, wondrous plant! Thou greatest among the manifestations of the wisdom and love of God, that may be seen in all the fields or upon the hillsides or in the valleys.

Almost anywhere in the United States at this time of the year one may look upon "ripening, waving fields" of "glorious corn." For it is grown in every state in the Union, although the eastern half of our country is richest in this splendid product of its fertile soil. No other form of plant life is so typical of the North American continent and none is so closely connected with American history as is maize or Indian corn. The name itself speaks of its real Americanism for maize is the Anglicized form of the Spanish "maiz," which in turn was derived from the Haytian "mahiz" or "mahis," the name by which the copper-skinned inhabitants of the West Indies, who welcomed Columbus, knew this plant.

There is every evidence that it was cultivated by the prehistoric races of the New World long before Columbus landed on its shores and this daring navigator carried the first grains of corn to Europe on his return voyage. It was a staple article of food for the first English settlers in America and every schoolboy is familiar with the story of how Massasoit's people taught the Pilgrims to plant corn "when the leaves on the oak trees were the size of a mouse's ear" and how to fertilize it by planting a fish in each hill with the grains of corn.

"Aye, the corn, the royal corn—" for indeed "Corn is King" in the United States. From the beginning of our history corn has been its principal agricultural product, far exceeding in volume and value any one other. The annual corn crop is around two and three-quarter billion bushels which far exceeds the one and one-quarter billion bushels record of oats and less than a billion bushels wheat record. The value of this gigantic corn crop is well over two billion dollars and the only other crops which can approach it in value are cotton with its value of one and one-quarter billions and hay with a value a little over that of cotton.

Although Illinois gave to the nation, in the words of one of its governors, what is considered the greatest tribute ever paid to corn, Illinois is not the greatest corn-producing state. She must bow to two others in that respect—Iowa, who is first, and Nebraska, who is second. Every year Iowa plants nearly 11,000,000 acres to corn and harvests a crop of nearly 400,000,000 bushels, valued at more than $275,000,000. And all loyal Hawkeyes know and sing this song composed by Ray W. Lockard and George Hamilton and set to music by Edward Riley:

IOWA CORN SONG

Let's sing of grand old I-O-WAY, Yo-ho, yo-ho, yo-ho,
Our love is stronger ev'ry day, Yo-ho, yo-ho, yo-ho,
So come along and join the throng, Sev'n' hundred thousand strong,
As you come just sing this song, Yo-ho, yo-ho, yo-ho.

Chorus

We're from I-o-way, I-o-way,
State of all the land,
Joy on ev'ry hand,
We're from I-o-way, I-o-way,
That's where the tall corn grows.

Our land is full of ripening corn, Yo-ho, yo-ho, yo-ho,
We've watched it grow both night and morn, Yo-ho, yo-ho, yo-ho,
But now we rest, we've stood the test,
All that's good we have the best,
I-o-way has reached the crest, Yo-ho, yo-ho, yo-ho.

Chorus

Nebraska, which plants more than 8,000,000 acres and harvests nearly 300,000,000 bushels, celebrates her fame as the second corn-growing state by proclaiming to all the world that her citizens are "Cornhuskers." Illinois takes third place with an acreage of some 300,000 less than Nebraska's and a production of some 37,000,000 bushels less. Fourth place goes to Kansas and this state has also produced a great tribute to corn—in the form of poetry instead of prose. For the state's most famous woman poet is Mrs. Ellen Palmer Allerton, who moved from Wisconsin to a farm near Hanlin, Kan., just 50 years ago. There was no house yet built upon their homestead when Mrs. Allerton and her husband arrived there and they lived in a small granary (which still stands on the Allerton farm) until a house was built. All around them for miles stretched fields of waving corn and this gave her the inspiration for the poem, "Walls of Corn," which she wrote in 1883 and which has been reprinted many times as a wonderful tribute to a wonderful "gift of a rich and fertile land."

Friendship's Elements

There are two elements that go to the composition of friendship, each so sovereign that I can detect no superiority in either, no reason why either should be first named. One is truth. The other is tenderness.—Emerson.

DAIRY

DAIRY COWS NEED SUCCULENT FEED

Silo Is Best Supplement for Dried-Up Pastures.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)
During the late summer pastures in most sections are short because of dry weather and because they are grazed too closely. If there is any grass, it is not succulent and is unpalatable. Consequently, cows will not consume enough for high milk production.

Experienced dairymen know that if the production of their cows has decreased during the hot, dry weather because of insufficient feed, it is difficult and practically impossible to bring the production back to normal during that milking period.

The summer silo, according to the United States Department of Agriculture, is probably the best means of supplementing short, dried-up pastures. For a herd of 12 to 20 cows, a silo from 10 to 12 feet in diameter is best suited for this purpose because the silage can then be fed out fast enough to prevent spoiling. If, however, all the silage is not fed during the summer it can be fed the following winter or the next summer. Silage will keep for several years. Dairymen frequently fill two silos, one for winter feeding and one for summer use.

Where it is not feasible to erect a silo for summer feed the short pasture may be supplemented by certain pasture crops instead of summer silage. In many sections sweet clover has proved very satisfactory for this purpose. It does well at this season and has the advantage of being a legume and consequently contains a large amount of protein. Alfalfa can also be pastured at this time and will assist materially in preventing the mid-summer drop in milk flow.

Many combinations of legumes, such as peas, vetches, and soy beans, with grains, such as corn, wheat, oats, barley and rye, can be grown and fed green. Successive planting of these crops will often provide succulent feeds over an extended period. Sudan grass is also well suited for grazing purposes throughout the Central West.

In addition to good pasture high producing cows need to be fed grain to supply the required nutrients. Cows producing more than 20 pounds of milk daily should be given one pound of grain to each four to six pounds of milk produced. The grain feed may be a mixture of corn, oats, wheat bran, or barley, and should always be ground. For cows producing more than 35 pounds of milk daily the grain mixture should contain one high-protein concentrate, such as the oil meals.

Keep Cream Cool During Hot Months of Summer

To receive the highest price for cream during the hot months, dairymen must exercise extra precautions. The following facts are worthy of consideration:

Water cools 20 times more quickly than air.
A simple cooling system may be made by piping water from the windmill into a hardwood barrel and from there to the stock tank. The cream can be placed in the barrel through which the fresh, cool water flows.

Cream, cooled to the proper temperature keeps sweet the longest possible time.
Never mix warm cream with cool cream.
Cream should be stirred frequently.

Cleanliness, cooling, stirring and frequent deliveries of cream are important.

Distasteful Flavors in Cream Caused by Weeds

Off flavors in cream may be caused by feeds and weeds, such as wild onion, garlic, leek and ragweed. Flavors may be absorbed from the surroundings. For example, oil, gasoline, and vegetable flavors may cause trouble. Another class of flavors resulting from bacterial contamination are called stale, cheesy, yeasty, bitter, or acid. All of these off flavors result in poor quality of cream and cause a financial loss to the dairy farmer. They may be eliminated by keeping cows out of pastures which contain undesirable weeds, handling and storing cream in sanitary surroundings, and by careful methods in production and handling.
Cooling of cream to 50 degrees Fahrenheit immediately after separation and frequent deliveries will help win the battle against poor cream.

Save Soil Fertility

One of the most difficult problems confronting our farmers who grow cash crops is the conservation of the soil's fertility. There is some difference of opinion as to the best method of accomplishing this, but judging the future by the past, we can safely say that there is no more certain of results than the keeping of livestock. The farmer who keeps cows, being a consumer rather than a seller of feeds, will constantly increase the fertility of his soil.

Point of Comparison

Hard on the Russians

Ronald McPherson, the rich Pittsburgh promoter, said on his return from Russia:

"The Russian government's moral sense is about equal to old Gobsa Goad's sense of etiquette.

"Old Gobsa Goad, the profiteer, was eating dinner in his tapestry-hung dining room when the bishop called—for a subscription, you know.

"The bishop came in timidly. The butler and the four footmen in the dining room averted him.

"Don't let me disturb you, Mr. Goad," he said. "I can call another time."

"No, no," said Gobsa. "Take a chair, do."

"And then he added with a polite society smile:

"You'll excuse me not eatin' this here rich puddin' with my knife, bish—it's so darn thin and sloppy."

A Borax Rinse

After washing, clothes should always be given a final Borax rinse. Half a cupful of 20 Mule Team Borax in this rinse water insures extra healthful cleanliness, for Borax is a mild antiseptic and deodorant.—Adv.

Wonderful

The Princess Joachim Albrecht about to sail from New York on the Leviathan, said to a reporter:

"I think America is wonderful. You pay the highest wages, yet you produce the best and cheapest goods. I think it is a miracle."

The princess smiled and added: "It is like the German clerk's landlady. The German clerk said, you know:

"My landlady is a wonder. We had a 12-pound Westphalian ham for supper last night, and she carved it in such thin slices that after we were all served the ham weighed 14½ pounds."

Rich Deposit of Rare Ore

What is declared to be the only known commercial deposit of brucite, a rare mineral that can be used where other magnesium compounds are now employed, has been discovered and opened to some extent near Luning, Nev., says Popular Mechanics Magazine. A prospector accidentally stumbled across the ore and at first had no idea of its character or its value. He had samples analyzed and the findings were that the deposit may yield a fortune for the discoverer.

Gigantic Cofferdam

The largest cofferdam ever constructed is now in use in connection with the development of St. John harbor, New Brunswick. It is 4,300 feet long by about 300 feet wide and incloses one of the two new piers projected.

How foolish a man feels when he hears of a baby being named after him!

Worried

After a recent censor meeting in Chicago, all the picture pruners left with newly sharpened scissors. Asked if censorship was to be lightened or not, one of the party replied: "We cannot say, at present. We are all looking forward with trepidation to the first talkie of a golf match."

Sometimes Thrilling

Who fancies cleaning the jaws and fangs of a highly annoyed king cobra or hamadryad whose bite is something very special in the way of death? This was one of the unpleasant tasks performed by keepers at the London zoo.

Snakes in captivity are frequently attacked by canker of the mouth, and the king cobra had to go through the ordinary medical examination. Its head was secured in a "snake stick," a peculiar rod with a leather loop, and its jaws were pried open and swabbed out with an antiseptic pad.

The venom of a king cobra has been known to kill an elephant in five hours. A short-sighted cobra probably mistook the elephant's trunk for a black snake and started a four-ton meal.

The Mystery of a Haunted Mansion

"You fool!" said Appleton, coldly venomous. "I do not object to your killing him. It is the manner of disposing of the body that stamps you as an imbecile. Why didn't you bury it where nobody could find it? What madness made you put it in the stream? It is beyond recovery by us, but the others will find it, and they will hold it like a club—not over you or Jim, but over me. You will find it hurts you, too! Well, it's done now, and we know that it will be discovered. Also we know that the men we are dealing with will make capital out of it." Appleton's icy rage grew with the thought of the disaster. "I shall be the sufferer—I, who thought that after tonight I should have no worries in the world!" He pointed at Luigi. "And this mass of clay from Palermo's underworld, who has had sanctuary here, and food and drink, when he should be in an Italian jail, has twice imperiled us!"

"That isn't fair, Fred," the woman protested. "Alone of them she seemed to be in no fear of him." "Kerr, or Chapin, or whatever his real name was, got that job because he knew there was some mystery here, and he hoped to blackmail us. Some one must have given us away. Either Luigi had to get him, or we might all have been discovered."

"Stupid!" he commented crossly. "Why do you all persist in misunderstanding me? You seem to think I am worrying about the death of an escaped convict, when I am only remembering the body here, must throw it in the lake, under the impression that there was an end of it." He waved his hand to the Sicilian. "Go! Remember, we need all your strength today. Sleep, if you want to. Jim will call you when we are ready."

Luigi's great carcass bowed, and animated itself with relief. His was a child's mentality. He bowed to them all. Jim liked his cooking. "I getta you four breakfests, Jeem," he said, smiling. "I make-a the tomato, garlic, and potato you like."

He took his way to the storeroom. After the meal he would sleep. After that, there would be work for him that no other man here could perform. Jim Delaney was stronger than most men, but he was not like Luigi, who had carried a grand piano on his back.

"You see, Jim," said Appleton, when the Sicilian had gone, "that we are now in the position of dealing with people who hold something definite against us."

"They're in as deep as we are," said Jim.

"Nothing of the kind! We may suspect them of a dozen murders, but whereas we have only suspicion they have a corpus delicti—actually the body of the crime. They can't help finding it. It has cost me a great deal of money and time to make it certain that they must find it. That's one of the exasperating things!"

"Forget it, Fred," the woman said, patting his head. "Two weeks from now we'll be in Europe, living like lords."

"Sure, chief," Jim declared. "They won't want to give you away, anyhow."

"There's risk in the whole affair," Appleton retorted. "If the deal goes through safely, they will use their knowledge to cut my price. If I refuse, they will pay, perhaps, but they'll get me for Luigi's foolishness. If they are discovered, they will have to accuse me to save themselves. Luck doesn't keep on. It was sheer luck that the police dropped the Red Chapin case when they found the mangled body of an old cell mate who had threatened to kill him. This thing worries me. Of course, you might get the body at the culvert, but you would most likely be seen. Safer, perhaps, to let things go. See that Luigi is ready when we need him."

Jim walked to the storeroom, calling the Sicilian by name. This cellar had been so constructed as to be sound-proof.

It was Junior's quick ear that heard him first, as he passed the door of Leslie Barron's cell.

"They'll find that man and know we're here," he whispered.

"We'll get him as he's finding him," Hanby said.

There were four now who crept toward the storeroom. They entered it just as Jim was kneeling by Luigi's side, untying his bonds. It was Leslie who made the first spring at him. Jim had not a chance. Outnumbered, taken by surprise, unable to rise to his feet, his struggle was futile. Side by side, he and Luigi nibbled viciously against gags.

"Now for Tom Burton!" said Hanby, when they left the storeroom.

When the door opened, Burton stood up and clenched his fists. He knew that some day Luigi's inherent love of torture would lapse into some such exhibition of violence as would kill him. Burton had great ideas of Nordic racial pre-eminence. He would show it even in their moments of dying, the Nordic strain was the thoroughbred one.

"Ah!" he said satirically. "The gentle Luigi! Good morning, Callie!"

Not until that moment had Hanby really liked Burton. It was as he saw him standing braced for punishment, and unafraid, that there came a change of heart.

"Tom, old man," he said, "Junior, Bill, and I are here. We've trussed up two gallows birds. How many more are there?"

When the light was turned on, it was seen that Tom Burton had suffered at his warder's hands. His face was thin and lined, his body braced and aching. There were tears in his eyes as he shook his rescuers' hands. Burton had little to tell. He knew only that the infamous Appleton, who had tipped him into the pit, ruled here absolutely. Burton had seen only Luigi, Jim, and Smucker. There might be others of whom he had not heard. He had no idea for what purpose Appleton had made his home here, or that he had been imprisoned beneath his cousin's house.

"We're here to clean out this place," Hanby said. "You'd better come along with us."

The searchers made slow progress, because they were as yet unaware of the number of inhabitants this subterranean fastness concealed. The general layout was speedily made clear. The large cellar with the lumber was the main feature. Then there were three little cells, a kitchen, a storeroom, and one other apartment. It was through the doors of this last that by straining their ears they could hear the faint hum of human voices.

While they were wondering whether to attempt to force an entrance, or to wait until the people within came out, they were relieved of making the decision. Mr. Appleton stepped out. He looked into the mouth of an automatic pistol in Hilton Hanby's hand.

For a moment flaming hate looked out of his eyes; then it died away. He was again the bland and suave little man whom they had known so long.

"I dislike revolvers," he said gently. "Furthermore, I am unarmed. You have something to say to me?"

"Quite a lot," said Hanby. "I trust you and your friends have been comfortable in my house. I begin to understand now on what you expended so much money. Mr. Douglas was puzzled about it. You are going to tell me why you spent it."

There was no question but that a look of relief passed over Appleton's face at what was virtually a confession that his purpose remained a secret.

"Call it a fad," he observed benevolently. "This living underground is nothing new. The famous duke of Portland, as you no doubt remember, constructed a ballroom and a riding school under the lake of his famous Welbeck Abbey estate. Consider me a humble disciple."

"He did what he chose on his own property. You are trespassing on mine."

"Poor Old Huckleberry Hawk!" She mocked.

"You've probably forgotten very conveniently, but you'll be hanged, for all that, if the police ever know about it!" There was a certain insolence about her that compelled admiration. "We may as well tell the truth," she went on. "Fred and I have been fond of each other for years. His wife wouldn't consent to a divorce, and my husband can't be located. Fred arranged this place where we could be undisturbed. He didn't fill in the lake completely, as you've no doubt found out. He fenced it with barbed wire, and planted thorn hedges to keep out trespassers."

Hanby interrupted her.

Scot First Brought Navel Orange North

The United States owes the successful introduction of the navel orange to the late William Saunders, horticulturist. It is not certain, however, that the trees which were introduced by Mr. Saunders were the first which had been brought to the United States, though they were the first to come into successful bearing. The late Thomas Hogg of New York, in an account published in 1888, stated that about 1838 a wealthy Scotch planter in Brazil determined to manumit his slaves and remove with them to the United States. He settled on an island in middle or southern Florida and then returned to Brazil and secured a collection of plants for introduction, which he assigned to Mr. Hogg, who at that time conducted a nursery at the corner of Broadway and Twenty-third street, New York city. Among these plants were several navel orange trees. After the plants had been held in a greenhouse for a year, in order to allow them to recover from the effects of the long sea voyage which they had undergone, they were forwarded to the owner in Florida. During the Seminole war the owner was charged with giving aid and comfort to the enemy, and the entire collection of plants was destroyed by the United States troops. The owner then moved to Haiti.

At the Training Camp. The recruit had hurried off to the drill grounds without his rifle. Some of the other rookies would be along soon, so stepping into a canteen he telephoned his company sergeant to have one of the boys bring it along.

"What's that you forgot?" asked the sergeant.

"My gun."

"Your what?"

"My gun. You know, G-U-N. G as in Jerusalem, U as in Europe, N as in pneumatic."

"What makes a difference, I admit. Well, Mr. Hanby, charge me what you think is a fair price for my tenancy and I will pay."

"There's another charge, too," Hanby reminded him. "Murder! It doesn't matter whether you strangled Smucker or your strong-arm men did it. You'll have trouble dodging the chair!"

"When you have made a complete confession, duly witnessed and signed, I shall turn you over to the police. Appleton, your goose is cooked, and you ought to have sense enough to know it. Why have you been scheming for years to get possession of this place? Why did you keep tenants away?"

"It was a fad," Appleton returned blandly. "Every man has one. You, for example, desired to be the owner of an estate. Well, that was my ambition, too. I have lost. You have won. Why, then, not be generous and let me go?"

He made a movement as if he wished to lead them away from the door. He did not notice that Pelham slipped behind him and produced a bunch of keys. Appleton was only aware that the door opened suddenly and he was pushed into the room.

It was the only apartment well furnished. Breakfast things were on a small table. In a chair a woman, still pretty, but no longer young, was smoking a cigarette. She jumped up in alarm.

"What's the matter, Fred?" she cried. "Who are these men?"

"Mr. Hanby," Appleton began amiably, "is incensed at discovering your retreat. Having found nothing irregular, he decides to accuse us all of murder. You are witness that this poor creature"—he pointed to Burton—"assaulted a giant huckleberry hawk intent on his destruction."

"My G—d!" cried Burton, incoherent in his anger. "He asked me to look at a giant fuchsia moth!"

"There is no such thing, of course," Appleton said pityingly. "You can see that his mind has gone. I had him put under partial guard, I shall admit that he suffered from a homicidal mania? He assaulted Smucker directly he came in, and later, unfortunately, he killed the poor fellow. There are witnesses to this."

"All d—d lies!" roared the professor. "Execrable falsehoods!"

"As to Smucker," continued Appleton, "he came here for the sole purpose of setting fire to the Gray house and killing its owner and all its inmates. I kept him here because I liked and respected Mr. Hanby and his family." Appleton's keen eyes were fixed on Hanby's face. "If Mr. Hanby denies knowledge of Smucker's avowed enmity, I shall be greatly surprised."

"We found him with matches and gasoline all ready to set fire to your house," the woman contributed.

"I don't doubt it," Pelham said dryly; "and I don't doubt that you were glad enough to stop him. If he had burned the Gray house, you would have died in its ruins. So far you haven't made out a case."

She shrugged her shoulders.

"If you don't want to be reasonable," she said, "that is your affair. If you want a murder trial, with a relative of the Hanbys in danger of hanging, call in the police. Two credible witnesses saw the murder committed."

"Madam," said the professor coldly, "you lie!"

"Poor old huckleberry hawk!" she mocked. "You've probably forgotten very conveniently, but you'll be hanged, for all that, if the police ever know about it!" There was a certain insolence about her that compelled admiration. "We may as well tell the truth," she went on. "Fred and I have been fond of each other for years. His wife wouldn't consent to a divorce, and my husband can't be located. Fred arranged this place where we could be undisturbed. He didn't fill in the lake completely, as you've no doubt found out. He fenced it with barbed wire, and planted thorn hedges to keep out trespassers."

Hanby interrupted her.

Yeggs in Hard Luck

Two safe-crackers retained their amateur standing when they attempted to blow a strong box at Oakland, Calif. They did not get into the box. Nothing was missing when company officials checked up, and while one of them was searching for clues, he found a $20 bill one of the yeggs had dropped in the excitement.

Insects Borne by Wind

Travel Long Distances

The race is not always to the strong, at least not in the case of insects. This has been determined by the use of an insect trap carried on an airplane operated by the Department of Agriculture. "So far, it seems that the stronger flyers, although influenced by the air current to a certain extent in their directions of travel, are able to confine themselves to comparatively low altitudes and have rather definite control over their directions of travel," says the report. "The weaker flyers, however, are not so successful in offsetting air currents, and apparently many of them are carried absolutely as the wind takes them. Species which never before have been suspected of being wind-borne have been caught at great elevations." As uncomfortable as this may be to the insect, it gives him, as a race, a considerable advantage over his stronger cousins in his fight against the persistent efforts of the government scientists and private farmers to exterminate him.

Fines Returned to Speeders

If you were fined for speeding, knew you were guilty, and were just succeeding in trying to forget it, then received a letter of apology and the amount of the fine from the government, how would you feel? That is what happened to a number of speeders in England recently. Scotland Yard had caught them in a speed trap and fined them. Later officials found that the trap was five yards shorter than it should be. Even allowing for the error the autoists were still guilty of speeding, but the British home office decided to take the sporting attitude, return the fines, and send letters of apology.

Prevention

Said Suburbanite Jones to his neighbor as they hurried to the morning train. "Did you go to the play with your wife after all?" "Yes," answered he, "rather than have her tell me all about it when she got home."
