ROSE CITY DROPS TWO GAMES TO LOCAL TEAM

Tawas City annexed two more games to its list of victories, when they trampled over Rose City Sunday and Monday. Sunday's game, which was played at Rose City, resulted in a score of 16 to 10 in favor of the local boys. Monday's game, in which Tawas City ran up a score of 20 to Rose City's 4, took place at the local athletic field.

Both games turned out to be slugging contests, Tawas City gathering 20 hits in each, while Rose City had 12 Sunday and seven on Monday. Forsten clouted the ball into deep center for a home run in the sixth inning of Sunday's game. Boldt had a wonderful record at bat Monday, collecting two triples, a double and two singles in six times at bat. Forsten also drove out a triple in this game.

Walt Moeller handled the hurling position for the locals in the first game. Labor Day B. Mark threw for Tawas City and set the visiting team down in great shape. Both Rose City pitchers, Cutler and Morrison, were pounded unmercifully by the Tawas City squad.

The fielding of each team was very much off color in both games. The end of Sunday's contest showed Tawas City chalking up with nine errors and Rose City with seven. A profusion of errors was also evident in the second game, the locals having five and Rose City seven.

BAY CITY WOMAN IS HURT IN CRASH HERE

Miss Ada Royal, instructor of physical education at Central high school, Bay City, received painful injuries in an accident Saturday night about 10 miles south of Tawas City on U. S. 23, and has since been removed to her home at 116 North Madison avenue.

Miss Royal received several broken ribs and lacerations on her arms and legs. She was traveling south, returning from a trip through northern Michigan and Wisconsin, when a car swung out of the line traveling north and met the car in which she was riding head-on.

She was rushed to Omer hospital and later transferred to Bay City. The driver of the other car figuring in the smash-up was Lewis Dooley, of Detroit.

LOCAL PUBLIC SCHOOLS OPENED ON TUESDAY

The local public schools began activities Monday afternoon with a faculty meeting at which all members were present. Questions of the usual routine nature at the beginning of school were considered, and plans were made for the study of special topics at future meetings. It was decided to have a general school exhibit at the local fair. We trust that many of our patrons took notice of this exhibit.

All departments were in session for a short time Tuesday morning in order that organization could be begun. The registration in the respective rooms is as follows: Primary, 25; lower intermediate, 31; upper intermediate, 41; grammar, 46; ward, 21; high school, 55.

Provision was made to permit the teachers and pupils to attend the local fair by having no sessions on Thursday and Friday afternoons.

Parents are again asked to cooperate in regard to pupils entering the school buildings. Pupils of the city should not enter either in the morning or at noon before the ringing of the first bell in either case. This rule is absolutely necessary, as may be readily seen, in the interest of good order and proper decorum, and one which you will find in practically every graduated school in Michigan.

JOHN E. KENNEDY

John E. Kennedy died suddenly at his home in Maple Ridge on Thursday, August 29.

Mr. Kennedy was born in Bomanon, Ontario, January 19, 1862. In 1885 he was united in marriage to Agnes Black. They later moved to Bay City, living there 25 years, and two years in Tawas. For the past 15 years Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy have resided in Maple Ridge. Mr. Kennedy has been a consistent member of the Presbyterian church since he was seventeen years old, and during its residence in Tawas, the family was a great acquisition to the local church.

He is survived by his wife and son, Douglas, of Pontiac, seven grandchildren, one sister and six brothers.

The Iosco Young People's Conference is advocating that each church school in the county send at least one boy to this conference. More detailed information will be available later, but it is wise to begin planning now.

Credit awards in the subject, "The Message and Program of the Christian Religion," have just been forwarded from the International Council for the following: Bessie and Jean Metcalf, Dorothy Merschel, Amanda McGilivray, Isabelle King, Elsie Hennigar, Ruby Evans, Inez Christenson, Lois Chambers and Dorothy Bigelow.

JOLSON TRIUMPHS IN "THE SINGING FOOL"

When Al Jolson's first picture, "The Jazz Singer," broke records all over the country, people said it would be impossible to equal it in glitter, glamour and heart appeal. The impossible has been done. For Warner Bros. now present Al Jolson in his second special picture, "The Singing Fool."

The world's greatest entertainer is seen in a part of tremendous and moving pathos, and he proves that he has what his legions of followers have always insisted he possessed—the genius for tragedy.

The night clubs of the Big Town—the haunts and the home of the singing waiter—whose heart-breaking humorous story makes the play.

The original for C. Graham Baker's picture is by Leslie S. Barrows. Lloyd Bacon directed and the star cast includes Betty Bronson, Josephine Dunn, Reed Howes, Edward Martindel, Arthur Housman, David Lee and Robert Emmett O'Connor.

"The Singing Fool" with Al Jolson in the star part is an event. It's the most uniquely heart-stirring screen effort ever offered. Visit the State Theatre Tuesday, Wednesday or Thursday.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to thank the neighbors and friends for their many acts of kindness during the illness and at the death of our son and brother, also for the beautiful floral offerings.
Mr. and Mrs. Ross Bernard,

WHITEMORE SCHOOL HAS ENROLLMENT OF 215

The Whittemore public schools opened on Monday, August 26. The enrollment this year is the largest in the school's history. Another teacher has been added to the teaching staff to care for the increased enrollment. The number of pupils in the various rooms is as follows: Kindergarten, first and second grades—44; Third, fourth and fifth grades—42; Sixth, seventh and eighth grades—45; Ninth, tenth, eleventh and twelfth—84.

The new teacher, Miss Mildred Albertsson, has the third, fourth and fifth grades. The entire staff of teachers consists of the following: Mrs. Jennie Valley, M. S. N. C., Ypsilanti, Kindergarten, first and second grades.

Miss Mildred Albertsson, Mount Pleasant, grades three, four and five.

Miss Delia Neal, Mount Pleasant, grades six, seven and eight.

Miss Pearl Strackangast, W. S. N. C., Kalamazoo, Latin, English.

Miss Margaret Kennedy, W. S. N. C., Kalamazoo, history, English.

Howard Switzer, Mount Pleasant, mathematics.

F. L. Stelter, M. S. N. C., Ypsilanti, Science, Political Science.

The people of Whittemore are very proud of their school and the people of neighboring towns surely must applaud them now that they, after much striving, sacrificing and tireless effort, have attained their goal. The writer has never seen a community where such whole-hearted cooperation is shown. It is this very interest and co-operation that has placed the Whittemore schools in the rank it now holds. The Whittemore high school thanks its many friends for their kindly interest in the past year and desires their friendship and co-operation during the year of which it expects so much. Surely, no year ever looked brighter.

CO-OPERATION BASIS FOR MORE GOOD ROADS

"Cooperation is the basis upon which to secure more good roads for any given section of the state" was the opinion ventured by T. F. Marston, Bay City, in a short but impressive talk as guest of E. W. Sims and family at an informal gathering at Sims Ranch last Wednesday evening. While Mr. Marston's short speech was not brought in at the head of the list of several talks, still it seemed to strike a needed response from 30 or more men who were guests at the Sims summer home. Mr. Marston admittedly could boast for no particular road route, owing to his connection with an organization that is boosting all of Eastern Michigan. However, he sees the advisability of roads leading to our summer resorts, but urged his hearers not to lose sight of the fact that the farm section, generally thought not worthy of full recognition, was also of vast importance. He, therefore, urged complete cooperation of both agricultural and tourist road factors in the securing of important roads for each other. He appreciates also, the importance and benefit of the developing all the resort or tourist places toward farming sections, inasmuch as the added valuations of shore or beach property will lessen the tax burden of the farmer. The construction of roads to several beach locations now untenanted will, he believes, help in the increasing valuation.

The gathering was productive of altered opinions, according to those who were present. It was thought by many that the meeting was for purely Shore Line road propaganda. This road did receive considerable boosting, it is true, but U. S. 23 and M-76, two other important highways in Arenac county, came in for frequent boosts in connection with the Shore Line venture.

Several of Mr. Sims' guests arrived during the afternoon and were taken on a tour of inspection of the beach north and east of Sims Ranch. This section is ideal for resort development and the advisability of a road through the places investigated was strongly impressed upon the state men.

In the evening all guests were served a splendid dinner by Mrs. Sims, her daughters and aids in a most attractive manner. Following the dinner hour Mr. Sims gave a short talk in which he showed where the farm value of Northeastern Michigan had been on a decline during the past several years and how the Shore Line road, which is now being constructed along the east shore of Michigan would be helpful in relieving the tax burden of the farmers in these communities.

It is his contention that developed resort sections will bring back prosperity to Northern Michigan and to do this, road improvements are necessary. He gave this as his reason for being an enthusiastic booster of the Shore Line road. In support of his argument he stated that Western Michigan, with an established shore line road, boasts of a total shore valuation of $96,000,000 compared to $55,000,000 in Eastern Michigan, and as a result collected $1,700,000 more in taxes.

Grover C. Dillman, state highway commissioner, was in full accord with Mr. Sims' plan of acquiring more shore line roads. Only seven

GREAT STAGE HIT IS A GREATER TALKING FILM

The fascinating Norma Shearer voice, which so captivated picture audiences in "The Trial of Mary Dugan," is to be heard on the screen of the State Theatre Saturday, Sunday and Monday, where "The Last of Mrs. Cheyne," her latest Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer starring production will be shown.

In the title role of Fredrick Lonsdale's well-known stage play, a role created on the New York stage by Ira Claire, Miss Shearer clinches her hold on stellar talking screen honors. When she made her vocal debut in "Mary Dugan" she convinced critics that she more than merited the laudatory prophesies voiced by her producers, and in this, her second dialogue appearance, she amply retains their confidence.

Swedes Return to Homeland From Russia

What is believed to be the largest wholesale return of "prodigal sons" ever recorded took place recently in Europe. About two hundred years ago a group of dissatisfied Swedes left their homeland and trekked to South Russia to make their future homes. Here the colony thrived and flourished to more than a thousand. However, since Russia turned Red the colonists, who had kept their identity without mixing a drop of Russian blood in their veins, began to get disgusted with the way things were going in their adopted land, so recently they decided to return to the land of their fathers and they went back in one huge train, whose arrival in Sweden is here shown with Red Cross nurses meeting it.

India: Superstitions

WE ARE likely to think of the American Indian as very brave. The truth is he was filled with a myriad of fears. He lived a life of never-ceasing superstitious terror. We are likely to think of him as a man of few words. Instead, when we look into his habits, we find him a chatterbox. Tongues of the Indians wagged endlessly about their campfires when they were among their own.

The Indian was fearful, ceaselessly fearful, because he lived in a world of a million spirits of every sort, some good, but most of them bad. Many of his pagan beliefs were amazing.

When an Ojibway woman buried her dead husband, she would run from the burial place in zig-zag fashion toward her home, dodging from tree to tree. Her object was to elude the spirit of the deceased. At sundown the whole village would set up a clamor of noise, rattling various things at hand, shaking the doors of the wigwams and creating a general hubbub. The idea was to frighten away the spirits.

Lakes were the abode of spirits. They lived in caves and caverns and strange shaped rocks. High mountains were wigwams in which gods lived. Smoke coming out of volcanoes were fires in the giant tepees of these gods. If a spring bubbled, that was the breathing of some spirit. Echoes were spirits mocking the one who called.

Everything that could not be explained was laid to the act of some god or spirit. So an epidemic would lead to incantations and offerings to the spirits. Belief in witchcraft was common and there are many instances of record showing that both men and women, convicted as witches or sorcerers, were put to death.

Among many tribes no one, not even the bravest warrior, dared leave the tepee or camp circle at night. They were literally afraid of the dark. It is said that there were tribes in the Hudson's Bay territory that were so terror-stricken of the darkness that they kept their fires burning all night and slept only in the daytime. The Mohawks would never leave their dwelling places at night except in groups, because of their fear of the darkness.

A crow was like a black cat—only much worse. Many an Indian expedition has been abandoned, the tribe turning back, because a crow sat and cawed in front of the line of march.

The Ojibwe believed in a dwarf people, about eighteen inches high, who killed any who came near them. The Shoshones had a legend of a tribe of imps, two feet high, naked and with a tail. They called them Ninumbees. The Choctaws knew of a race of diminutive people who rode swiftly in the moonlight on the backs of deer and sang magic songs. These mythical people were known as itallaboyes.

Blackfeet worshiped demons with much ceremony and self-torture. They had to torment themselves without showing any sign of pain. Some tribes buried their dead children by the side of a trail in the hope that their spirits might enter the body of some woman passing. If this happened they would be born again.

The Dakotahs believed that when one became ill it was due to an animal spirit entering the body. A toothache was the work of a woodpecker's spirit. Dreams played an important part in their superstitions. They found cause to either fear or worship almost everything in nature. Some tribes worshiped the sun and the moon.

Peculiarly shaped stones, bits of copper or iron ore, fragments of quartz became heirlooms or amulets and sometimes were cherished in families for generations. Such things, regardless of bulk or weight, might be carted around from camp to camp for many years. Medicine bags became the reposing places of strange bits of junk.

Sometimes when a great chief died the mourners would cut off fingers and otherwise mutilate themselves. Again they might rip off patches of skin. Such actions are supposed to be due to a morbid fear and terror of death.

When a whirlpool in some stream sucked down a man, the Indians believed a devil reached up from his abode and grabbed the victim. If a man fell and was hurt, a demon of some sort tripped him.

Prior to the coming of the whites, it is claimed, no Indian had any conception of a Supreme Being. The Algonquin word, Manitou, was applied to gods in general. Most gods were evil. They were things to be overcome. They might be met in the form of almost anything—a toad, perhaps, or a worm, or a turtle. Many tribes especially feared to kill a rattlesnake. When they met a rattlesnake they would gather around it, praise it, speak of it in high terms, call it grandfather and pledge their word that they would protect it.

Thus almost everything that came into an Indian's life, either animate or inanimate, might be haunted or a devil or a god. Everything was a "sign" to him and the most of his signs were bad ones. Compared with the Indian as he was, the southern negro is almost superstition-free.

A Good Man You Can't Keep Up

Adjusting a Diver's Shoe

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

THE city of Newport, R. I., claims as one of its citizens a man who is living proof of the fact that the old saying "You can't keep a good man down" should be revised to read "You can't keep a good man up." For that man is Tom Eadie, chief gunner's mate in the fleet naval reserve and deep-sea diver, hero of a hundred desperate adventures under the water and famous for his work during the raising of the sunken submarines, S-4 and S-51, which won him the Navy Cross and the Congressional Medal of Honor.

Tom Eadie likes diving. He says so in a book which he has written, published recently by the Houghton Mifflin company. Its title is "I Like Diving." He starts off the story of his career thus:

I like diving. There is always a thrill in it. I felt it before I ever made a dive, and I feel it now when I have been diving for nearly twenty years. You have to like it, or you don't stay at it, for it is no boy's play. There's a heap of diving besides putting your head under water. It means the hardest kind of work—real manual labor—under the most difficult conditions and sometimes under conditions of great distress.

Take a job when the ocean water is down to the freezing point of fresh water and when you can't do work in gloves. To get an idea of it, just sit in a boat in your warm overcoat and stick your hand over the side into the salt water. Hold it there for five minutes in that freezing brine, and then try to think what it would feel like if you kept it there an hour.

It isn't easy to explain the thrill you get out of diving. It isn't exactly the love of adventure, though every dip is an adventure, or may be one before a man comes to the surface again.

Certainly it isn't the thrill of facing danger, though a diver's life is really in the hands of the man on the top side tending him, and any one of a lot of little things may in an instant reduce a diver's chance of seeing his family again to a one-to-ten shot.

Certainly it isn't the thrill of just a new experience. One dive would satisfy that craving. There is something more that makes men keep at it and become divers. I suppose I just happened to be one of those men that have that something more, though sometimes it seems to me as if I couldn't be anything but a diver.

Whatever the thing is, it makes diving a profession instead of a trade—for I take it that a profession is an occupation where the work is more interesting than the pay. Not that the pay isn't good—for some divers at least. With nothing but my pay I have managed to acquire a good home of my own; I have a car, and I live along with the other millionaires and navy men in Newport.

It is apparent that, despite the financial reward which he mentions, diving means much more to Tom Eadie than just the money it brings. Perhaps the traditions of the United States navy in which he served for a score of years has something to do with it. Rear Admiral Philip Andrews, who wrote the introduction to Eadie's book, has this to say about it: "Eadie's story of dangers and difficulties overcome carries a lesson to all readers, this is what it has meant to him: Do your best and give your best to the task in hand. I believe I can say that this is the spirit of the navy."

And if money had been the main end for Tom Eadie, Commandant C. P. Plunkett of the New York navy yard, in reporting to the secretary of the navy concerning Eadie's work in salvaging the S-51, could not have written these words:

The Commandant desires to call attention to the fact that for his services as a diver during the spring operations, a period of about three months, Eadie's entire compensation was $1,300. The amount that the government saved in money alone by Eadie's services can best be judged from the fact that when the Commandant was endeavoring last fall to bolster up the force of divers, which was then inadequate, by hiring civilian divers, the best offer he could get was the loan of four divers by a commercial salvage company at the rate of $1,300 per day for the four men, or in other words, $1,300 for the use of one man for four days. Such an offer was, of course, declined. It is interesting to observe that the expedition had the services of a diver who is believed to be without a peer anywhere in the world for a period of three months at practically the same cost as one ordinary commercial diver for a period of four days.

Yes, Tom Eadie "likes diving." He first enlisted in the navy in 1905 and during his second enlistment of four years he received instruction, at his own request, in the profession which he has followed ever since. "When he says in his casual way that in that profession "any one of a lot of little things may in an instant reduce a diver's chance of seeing his family again to a one-to-ten shot" he is understanding the case about as far as it can possibly be done.

Here is one incident in his career when he had gone down to salvage a torpedo which had gone to the bottom during torpedo practice. He writes:

One day I found the torpedo I was hunting for standing on the bottom on end. I had to climb up on it to make the strap fast for hoisting. The thing was thoroughly greased of course, and as I was working up it, my foot hit the starting lever and we were off for the surface.

Of course, if I let go the torpedo would go up, and as the propellers caved in on me, the mud would open all the way to my breastplate. So I hung on with my arms around it, slipping back toward the propellers all the time, and managed to stay with it till I came to the surface. Then it floated, and I was safe.

Another time, he records: When you have to go down into the mud for a torpedo you wash it clear of its bed with a stream of hose water. One torpedo I salvaged was 22 feet down in the mud. It had gone down on a slant, and I had to crawl along the side of the hole round it rather than wash away the immense amount of silt over it. I did this, of course, to shorten the job, but it came near shortening my life. I worked well down on the torpedo, hosing round it, and all of a sudden the mud caved in on me. I kept my head, for I realized that I had the means of my own salvation in my hand—the hose. I was pressed down into as little space as possible, but I found I could bring the nozzle up close to my helmet alongside my escape valve. I knew I must get and keep that clear of mud or the air would build up in my suit.

Then I worked the nozzle slowly back and forth in front of me, cutting away at the mud overhead to give myself every chance. It was long and slow but I finally cut through to the open water and back along my lines. They knew on the top side that something was wrong, of course. But they didn't haul me, luckily for me, the line and the hose wouldn't have stood the strain they would have put on me, to say nothing of the chance that they would probably have hauled me apart. They signaled to ask if I were all right, of course, but with my line buried in the mud I couldn't feel their signal. I didn't signal to be hauled up either, you bet. As soon as I was clear, I went to work again, and this time I didn't try to make any short cuts, but hosed the whole thing out. I finished that job the long way.

Around Orchard

CONTROL BORERS WITH CHEMICAL

Paradichlorobenzene About Tree Is Effective.

Peach tree borers have played havoc in some orchards but they may easily be controlled by using a chemical called P-C-Benzene.

"The full and correct name of this chemical is paradichlorobenzene," says C. H. Brannon, extension entomologist at the North Carolina State college. "Despite its tongue-twisting name, however, it is very effective in controlling the peach tree borer. If it is applied around the base of the tree in the right manner and at the proper time, from 90 to 100 per cent control will be secured. The method of using this chemical has been tested in both experimental and commercial orchards and growers are advised to use it regularly each year."

P-C-Benzene can be used on trees four years of age and older with perfect safety, states Mr. Brannon. If younger trees are badly infested, they may be treated with one-half ounce of the chemical. Trees four and five years of age should get three-fourths of an ounce each; trees six years of age and older should get a full ounce and very old trees with large trunks should get an ounce and a fourth.

The time of application is especially important. For North Carolina conditions, this time should be between September 25 and October 10. These dates should be closely followed if best results are to be obtained, states Mr. Brannon. In applying the P-C-Benzene, the crust of the soil is broken and smoothed off above the highest borer hole. The chemical is about like granulated sugar and gives off a gas that penetrates downward into the borer holes. Scrape away the gum and apply the chemical in a continuous ring about an inch wide and about an inch from the trunk. Several shovels of dirt should then be placed over the crystals and packed into a mound with the back of the shovel.

Amount of Nitrogen Will Depend Greatly on Soil

On only the very richest of ground can the peach grower afford to leave off the application of nitrogen to his bearing trees. On many of the poorer soils it will pay well to apply nitrogen to trees below the bearing age. This will aid the trees to get the necessary size for good production in less years than will otherwise be necessary.

Too much nitrogen, especially in a wet year can be a serious disadvantage to the grower. When a great excess of nitrogen is present with the greater induced growth, the fruit is more susceptible to brown rot and other diseases and the shipping quality of the undiseased fruit is much poorer.

Three Most Promising Varieties of Cherries

The late California plant breeder, Luther Burbank, gave much attention to cherries, and three promising varieties of sweet cherries were distributed by him within recent years: Abundance, Giant and Burbank. The first two have been grown by the New York experiment station and their behavior under eastern conditions is given in their bulletin series on "New and Noteworthy Fruits." As grown in New York, Abundance is described as a "splendid late cherry of the Napoleon type. One of the best of Burbank's new fruits." As to Giant, "the quality is splendid and the cherries do not crack."

Horticultural Facts

Trees like the peach, which start new branches readily from the central trunk, but the twigs of which tend to dry out badly, should be cut back most severely.

One of the useful features that has been developed in connection with apple storage problems is the use of oiled paper wraps for the prevention of scald and the better keeping quality of the fruit.

Sow the cover crop in the cultivated orchard now. Crimson clover, crimson clover and oats, mammoth clover, rye and vetch are all good. Only remember that if rye is sown it should be turned under in the spring.

Lime sulphur solution should be made in an iron kettle over a fire or in a steam boiler.

Nowhere does clean, careful cultivation pay better than in a vineyard. It should be thorough, extending under the trellis when put up, and working up all the soil in the row.

Now and then a peach tree or a nectarine tree will even bear fruit that is half nectarine and half peach. That's how closely the two fruits are related.

Community Building

Few "Small Towns" Not Thoroughly Up to Date

The average small town now offers about everything the city has except the "rush hour" and a few other inconveniences. Convincing proof of the changes taking place in the life of the small centers is found on almost every hand. Particularly is this true in many of the older centers, which a few years back were inclined to be satisfied with conditions as they were.

There is now a new life and renewed interest. In times gone by many towns were prone to slumber on after the arrival and departure of its few daily trains. Now most centers of any consequence either are on or near one of the arteries of the state's road system. This has resulted in an almost constant traffic, such as the operation of bus lines on regular schedules and parades of motor cars, in addition to rail service.

It is a rather slow locality of any size that does not have its chamber of commerce working for the town's welfare and advancement. Country clubs, golf courses and swimming pools are becoming common. Likewise the "talkies" are about as prevalent in the smaller communities as in the cities. And the radio is tuned in on the same offerings furnished elsewhere. The women are playing as much bridge as their sisters in the more populous centers. The girls are just as modern and the boys just as shelfish and up-to-date as those in the city.—Exchange.

Money Wisely Expended on Paint and Varnish

Cleaning up the individual premises of a home owner or occupant is the first essential element in improving the appearance and health conditions of the property. After this is done painting and varnishing may follow. A small amount of money invested each year in paint and varnish keeps the property in good condition with no periods of deterioration or expensive repairs. A good surface of paint on the woodwork, both interior and exterior seals up the pores in the wood, keeping out germs, insects and decay.

The home owner may establish a system of painting his home, so that parts of it may be painted one year, other parts the next, and still more parts the third year. In this manner no heavy expenditure faces the home owner every three years or so. And at the same time, the home always appears to be in first-class condition.

Painting also serves as a health measure. Any surface that is painted regularly cannot harbor germs that menace the health of the family.

Problems of Nature Lovers

In Nature Magazine Charles Sumner Bird, Jr., chairman of the Massachusetts committee on Needs and Uses of Open Spaces, had a most interesting article, in the course of which he says:

"It is recognized today that beauty is not a luxury, but an absolute necessity to the complete life of every normal human being. The man who does not crave the beauties of nature has a twisted soul and should be an object of pity; and, if he should be the slave of a blind commercialism which impels him to destroy for others the beauties of nature, he is a bad citizen. Every problem of importance today is common to all countries; and England, the cradle of the Industrial age, faces difficulties corresponding to those which nature lovers in America are mobilizing to solve. It may be said here that the sooner this mobilization on as large a scale as possible is consummated the sooner will the ravages on the face of nature be stayed."

Protecting the Tree

Strong wire cable scientifically installed in the tops of trees will strengthen the forks and hold the branches safe from storms that would otherwise be fatally destructive. To be effective the job must be done correctly and carefully. The weight of the limbs, the strain of the wind, the strength of the wood and the manner of branching must all be considered if proper results are to be secured. It is work for trained men.

Even so, it is comparatively inexpensive work and certainly is more than justified as a means of insuring trees against the ravages of the wind storms of summer and the sleet storms of winter.

Driveways Worth While

An attractive concrete driveway adds much to the appearance of the grounds, because it enhances beauty and makes for neatness. Its utility lies in its providing safe passage to the street or highway the year round. Automatically a good driveway increases the value of property. It matters not how modest the home or limited the space in lawn, the driveway is an important and necessary adjunct to house and garden.

Give Thought to Tree

Trees that are properly cared for will live almost indefinitely. A tree that is neglected can no more be expected to thrive than can the man or the woman who needs medical attention but neglects to get it. Disaster follows.

DOTS, PLAIDS, CHECKS POPULAR; CONTRASTS STRESSED FOR FALL

WOMEN sensitive to the subtle changes which mark the progress of fashion are choosing polka dots, stripes, plaids and checks rather than floral prints for fall. Weaves of every description lay stress on these patterings.

Such interesting novelties are highlighted as plaid velvets, plaid satins and plaid taffetas. Jacket suits of plaid velvet with tailored satin for the blouse, are among the joys in prospect, also for smart semiformal daytime dresses of either plaid satin or taffeta. Satin plaided in blended colors being much newer than taffeta one naturally feels a more spontaneous urge to make it first choice. Satin-back silk moire overprinted with a variation of a plaid makes its appearance among dressy fabrics.

For sports wear jersey, flannel, crepe and sheer woolsens also reflect the influence of dotted, plaided and striped themes. Younger matrons and girls are especially keen about jacket suits made up of patterned sports fabrics which accounts for the attractive sports costume of a printed crepe of dot motif which youthful and ever-smiling Barbara Kent wears "between acts" when her presence is not demanded before the movie camera. A jacket suit of this character is well tuned to autumn needs.

A further point of interest stressed in this attractive suit is the use of meet each other half way, the result is a striking contrast, which is exactly what fashion has set out to accomplish for the coming season.

The frock in the picture below eloquently bespeaks the trend to contrasts which is so emphasized in incoming modes. This fetching model has a red and blue printed top, which is ingeniously teamed to a navy blue rayon skirt.

Instances of half-in-half fabric treatments are repeated throughout the advance style program. A favorite maneuver is to join a circular flounce of plain fabric to a long slender, fitted princess top of gay colored print completing the idea with a graceful cape collar of the plain.

In this connection it may be well to remark upon the increasing interest shown for dresses which adopt molded princess lines at the top which develop into smartly contrasting flares about the knees. There is no doubt bows. To live up to the mode of the moment one cannot escape bows. The jacket in the top picture fastens with bow ties—two of them. Bows which are especially featured in connection with yokes, the necklines of the new frocks often being thus stylized.

Then, too, the blouse which ties at the left hip with a soft bow occurs throughout advance displays. Whole flocks of little bows are used for trimming the new modes, which answers the call for "dressmaker" touches even on semi-tailored garments.

Referring again to stripes, plaids and dots not only do they flourish in the very fabrics which fashion the dress or ensemble, but they often add an accessory touch. That is the hat, the scarf, the bag, subscribes to the same costume are diverting the talent of French milliners to a new line of endeavor, and for these types very novel weaves are employed.

When solid color and gay print about it the dawn of an entirely different silhouette is at hand.

As to aforementioned color contrasts which feature print versus plain, perhaps in no direction is this vogue so persistent as in the fall jacket-suits and ensembles. The new materials especially encourage such fabric manipulation as a plaid velvet skirt and jacket with a satin waistcoat or a striped jersey blouse with a tweed-like jersey suit. Perfectly stunning frocks work printed plaid satin together with plain, for plaids and stripes expressed in terms of satin are the last word in the fabric realm.

For dressy afternoon wear a blouse of the new metal dotted chiffon contrasts handsomely with a black velvet suit. Georgette semi-fitted frocks are frequently enriched with flares and even plaided flounces of transparent velvet in the new daytime modes.

Guinea Pigs Good Eating

Your menu of the future may list one of the oldest American dishes, but one which you probably have never tasted—guinea pig. The Farm Journal reports an increasing interest in raising the little animals throughout the country and points out that they are as appetizing as either rabbits or squirrels, and that, since they are entirely vegetarian in diet, their flesh is among the cleanest of domestic animals. Early Spanish explorers, it is recalled, found Indian tribes that bred guinea pigs and prized them above wild game.

Words
Debt and doubt were once spelled dot and dout, just as they were taken from the French, but the scholars of the Renaissance, anxious to show the ultimate derivation from the Latin stems "deb" and "dub," inserted an entirely unnecessary "b" into the words. The word sport is an abbreviation of "disport," a French word meaning "to carry oneself in a different direction from that of one's ordinary business."—Exchange.

American Indian Music
Among the Indians of the Southwest notch sticks, which are rasped together or on gourds, bones or baskets to accentuate the rhythm, and rattles, too, are common. The Maidu Indians of California have a musical bow possessed of great religious importance.

A motorist admitted running over the same man twice. The time has evidently come that there aren't enough pedestrians to go 'round.

Ground oats at $2.20 per 100 lbs.; whole oats, 65c per bu.; corn, $1.30 per bu.; corn and oat chop, $2.35 per 100 lbs.; flour middlings, $2.50 per 100 lbs.; wheat bran, $2.00 per 100 lbs.; oyster shells, $1.50 per 100 lbs.; cracked corn, $2.50 per 100 lbs.; coarse corn meal, $2.50 per 100 lbs.; Hexite, $2.25 per 100 lbs.; ground barley, $2.15 per 100 lbs.

Small Boy (on arrival at country cottage): "Mummy where is the bathroom?"
Mother: "There isn't any bathroom, dear."
S. B.: "Good! This is going to be a real holiday."

Now is the time to feed Hexite, while the weather is dry. It will keep your cows in good condition, and will increase their milk production.

"Does your wife do her own ironing?"
"I should say not! I won't allow a flatiron in the house!"

Judge (after charging the jury): Is there any question that anyone would like to ask before considering the evidence?

Juror: A couple of us would like to know if the defendant boiled the malt one or two hours, and how does he keep the yeast out?

We are still selling scratch feed for $2.40 per 100 lbs. Made out of pure grain.

"You'll drive me out of my mind."
"That's no drive, it's a putt."

Just received a car of corn and a car of barley.

Doc: Where shall I vaccinate you?

Coincidence

New York.—Several months ago an author of my acquaintance completed a novel, which has been appearing as a serial in a magazine but is not yet out in book form, in which the hero is the inventor of a machine which enables motorists to serve themselves with gasoline by dropping quarters in a slot. A few weeks ago it was announced that a California inventor had perfected such an apparatus.

City Museum

New York, which already may lay claim to being the city of museums, will have a museum of its own next year, wherein will be displayed the municipal waxworks. Unlike the waxworks at Coney Island, which pictures such civic events as the murder of Arnold Rothstein, this museum will depict the more serious and important moments in the history of the municipality. The first scene will show Henry Hudson on the deck of the Half Moon, approaching the island of Manhattan on his search for a route to the Indies.

Other scenes will show Peter Minuit making his famous $24 deal with the Indians, and Washington's inauguration at Federal hall. Also pictured will be a draft riot in Union Square during the Civil war, and the waterfront in the days of clipper ships. No plans have been laid for picturing more modern events, but I, for one, vote for the inclusion of a scene depicting the returning of Lindbergh from Paris. There was something that for sheer magnificence may never be duplicated.

Floating Hotel

Several years ago an imaginative reporter got himself and his newspaper into all sorts of trouble with a highly colored story about a floating palace on Rum Row, where the elite of the fast set were enjoying gambling and drinking orgies. The vessel was pure imagination on the reporter's part, and every one agreed, a very superior grade of imagination. But now the real thing has appeared off the coast of Long Island. It is a luxurious boat, operated as a hotel where stage and society folk spend their week-ends. It is no gambling hell or floating liquor dispensary, and it operates within the law.

Foolish Squirrels

Columbia university, where men and women are equipped in a superior fashion for their battle with life, has proved the undoing of a community of squirrels. These animals have been

Claims Plane Shakes Dishes Off Her Shelf

Syracuse, N. Y.—That a low-flying airplane keeps her awake and "shakes dishes off the shelves" in the wee hours of the morning was the complaint made to the police here recently by one housewife. "It flies so low it wakes us all up and the vibration from the engine shakes dishes off my shelves," said the woman, adding that she wanted "something done about it." The sergeant promised to do his best, though as yet there are no "air cops" on the force.

broken down mentally to such an extent that they have forgotten the in-born squirrel instinct to bury nuts in summer so that they may eat in winter. The students are at fault. Apparently all of the thousands that attend the university in the winter session have been willing to provide nuts for the campus squirrels, and the squirrels have developed a devil-may-care philosophy. And the strange part of it is that early summer is the leanest period of the year for these improvidents, for the winter students have departed and the summer session attendants have not yet arrived.

It Won't Be Long Now

SOME DAY WE'LL DEMAND PURRING ENGINES AS WE HAVE IN THE AUTO.

Caligula's Galleys Disappoint

Rome.—Caligula's galley, about which so much has been written in Italy and elsewhere, is proving a disappointment to the Italians, and a source of worry to the peasants of Nemi, whose medieval city overlooks the lake in which the galley was sunk.

Now that several million gallons have been drained from what was till recently the most beautiful lake near Rome, the bulk has appeared in all its dilapidation. Its worn beams, entirely bare of those ornaments of marble, copper and mosaic that were described with such glowing color, have been kept together only by the mud of the bottom of the lake. Now that they have been exposed to the sun, they are in danger of crumbling away altogether, and the two firms that have undertaken its salvage at their own expense hastily had it boarded up, while continuing pumping operations, though on a reduced scale, as the rapid pumping of the last six months not only caused landslips, but may throw the beams of the bulk apart altogether.

Hope to Reconstruct Galley. Archeologists and antiquarians are not so disappointed as the general public, nor do they share the anger of the Nemi peasants, whose famous strawberry beds, which used to reach to the water's edge, are damaged by the withdrawal of moisture and the frequent landslides.

They point out that once the water is drained from the galley's keel, and the cooler weather makes it possible to remove the boarding, it will be simple enough to remove the bulk beam by beam and "reconstruct" it on the shores of the lake, where a small museum is to be built for its reception. Whether the operation will solve the riddle of how galleys of ancient Rome were propelled remains to be seen. Former attempts to save this one did more harm than good. Large quantities of wood taken from it were sold for fuel, and the better parts made into "keepsakes," such as snuff boxes and walking sticks.

Emperor is Playful.

As to the precious marbles and bronzes with which the barges were covered, local rumor has it that the Emperor Caligula, being in a playful mood, sunk the boats on purpose, with his friends on board to see what they would do when in danger of drowning, but carefully had everything of value removed. The discovery of a large wolf's head in copper, a few tiles and some long copper nails does not entirely refute this legend, for the heads were used as figure-heads, and the tiles may have covered a cabin. One head, evidently the twin of that found near the bulk recently, has been in Terme museum in Rome for some years. The copper nails were purely ornamental, as experts who examined the bulk found the beams were kept together by dove-tailing one into the other.

Now that the barge near the shore has proved disappointing, archeologists' hopes are centered on the one further out which, they say, will be in better condition, as neither peasants nor relic hunters could get at it so easily. But the two firms who are undertaking their salvage for purely patriotic reasons have already spent over 1,500,000 liras ($75,000) against an estimated 200,000 liras ($10,000). And it is not certain that they will be able to attack the second vessel, which would prove even more costly. The estimate was that both would be laid bare by next October.

British Aristocrat a Genius

London.—Any schoolboy fresh from his first chemistry lesson, will tell you that water is H2O—a statement, by the way, with which modern scientists do not altogether agree. Not everybody, however, can say who first made that stupendous fact known to the world.

It was a millionaire bachelor Henry Cavendish by name, nephew of one of the dukes of Devonshire. He was so shy that he kept many of his discoveries secret lest he should become famous, and they were only unearthed after his death; so shy that if he ever caught sight of one of his own women servants, she had to pack her bag and leave that day. He was so shy that when his banker came to tell him he had $400,000 in his account—and wasn't that rather a lot to him?—he sent the man of business away, told him to do what he liked with it, but said he would close his account if they ever bothered him again.

He was so shy, says the London Mail, that having a wonderful library of books he was quite willing to lend he took a separate house in Soho so that borrowers need never disturb his studies. Whenever he took out a book himself he always signed for it like any stranger.

Not only did he tell how water is made. He was one of the first to discover that heat is not a substance but a state; one of the first to measure the density of the earth; a pioneer of electricity, an astronomer, a geologist. Rustles at Clapham, where he had his country seat, peeped through his windows and saw, instead of furniture, a laboratory and a forge. They thought he was either a wizard or a madman; but he was merely a genius.

ESCAPING FROM ONESELF

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

It was Joseph Conrad in his introduction to his "Tales of Unrest" who said, "We cannot escape from ourselves."

He was relating his experiences in writing a series of short stories. Having written one he outlined another upon what he thought was an entirely different plan, with new phrasings, new points of view, a different method of attack. "It was only later," he confesses, "that I perceived that in common with the rest of men nothing could deliver me from my fatal consistency. We cannot escape from our selves."

Every day I see the truth of the statement in my own actions and in the reactions of those with whom I come into contact. We deceive ourselves that a new environment, a different job, a milder climate will inspire us with greater enthusiasm, will give us a keener desire for work, or help us to go at unpleasant tasks with increased eagerness. These things seldom have the effect we anticipate, for, in truth, it is not the climate, nor the job, nor the environment that is wrong, but ourselves. Gentry tells me that he is going to Wisconsin next year. His work at Illinois has been something of a failure. He doesn't like our weather, which, truth compels one to admit, is variable. Living conditions do not please him, his associates bore him, and his instructors are dull and altogether commonplace. The facts are that Gentry is lazy, he has been spoiled at home, and so has grown selfish and self-centered. He will be disappointed wherever he goes, for he is not going to be able to get away from himself even in Wisconsin.

Dorner as a boy had always seemed to me a very disagreeable person, critical, pessimistic, caviling at the slightest opportunity for adverse criticism. Even when he was sitting off in a corner alone, he never seemed to me to be enjoying himself. His own company, even, was disagreeable to him. I had not seen him for some time until a few months ago when he seemed like a new creature, and I had the temerity to say so to him.

"I waked up to the fact one day," he explained to me, "that I was an impossible person to live with—ill-tempered, critical, ill-mannered, selfish. The fact at first did not make such a strong impression on me as it did later when I realized that always, whatever I did, wherever I went, early or late, night or day, I should have to live with myself. There was no escaping it, I could get away from my family, I could snub the neighbors, I could ignore the people I met on the street, but my own personality followed me like a shadow inescapably a part of me. The thought frightened me, I decided to make myself the sort of person with whom it would be pleasant if not profitable to live."

"But these other two men?" Burton asked anxiously.

"They will find that they have an opportunity to get away. It's clouding over for rain. I'm willing to match my giant huckleberry hawk against your fighting fuchsia moth that we shall never see Jim or Luigi again!"

Jim and Luigi could hardly believe their eyes when they saw that the men with automatics had become neglectful. The two miscreants merged into the shadows, and faded from sight by some secret and unknown path.

There remained Appleton and his lady. Their problem was not so simple. Appleton must be held.

When the cell door was unlocked, the lady was voluble and angry. When Appleton's door was flung open, he lay on the floor.

"You've killed him!" she said, and flung herself at his side.

There was no doubt that she loved him. Presently he sat up and smiled at her. His face was white.

"My heart is not strong," he admitted. "Men with high color often owe it less to good health than to heart trouble. I have had much to worry me today. With your permission, I will get some medicine before we resume our conference."

Appleton seemed shrunken and feeble. It was the woman who supported him. Slowly they walked ahead of their captors toward the large living room. Appleton was courteous to the last.

"It is your house," he said, smiling feebly. "After you, gentlemen!"

Burton was the last to enter. When he was well in the room, the door was suddenly shut and locked behind him.

Five men stared at one another helplessly. The sick man had tricked them.

CHAPTER XI

It was ten minutes before they had smashed the door down. Outside there was nothing but darkness and pelting torrents of rain. With flashlights they searched the sanctuary until, about midnight, torn by thorn spikes and drenched to the skin, they had to confess that they were beaten. Appleton and his lady had escaped.

The five made their way to the wire edge of the bird sanctuary and came, exhausted, to the Gray house. Dina, Celia, and Florence Burton were waiting. Their alarm would have been greater had not Hanby left a note, saying that he and Bill and Junior were going on a long hiking trip.

"Here," said Hanby dramatically breaking in on them, "are the lost ones! Florence, here is your Tom. Celia, behold the captor of the wild fawn. I haven't a moment for explanations," he added. "Junior and I have to go out again." He turned to the front door as soon as you can.

Hurriedly he picked up the telephone and called the local chief of police, whom he had met in the Red Chapin murder affair.

"Mr. Hanby talking," he began. "I've just come in. I met a whole train of big trucks passing along south. I wouldn't be surprised if they were running a cargo of booze. I'd look into it, if I were you."

He hung up the instrument.

"I did that," he explained to his family, "because I want the seizure made somewhere not on my property. Boyle happens to be one of the tenants whose repairs Appleton has always supervised."

"What seizure?" Dina cried.

"Bill will have to tell you all about it."

Hanby picked up the telephone instrument that connected with the garage, the stables, and the gardeners' quarters. The listeners heard him give what seemed an extraordinary order. He instructed the three men in the stables to ride around the bird sanctuary until he ordered them to cease patrolling, and to hold any trespassers who tried to break away from it.

"Bill will explain," he said. "We'll be back in half an hour."

It was almost an hour before he came in.

"We've been checking up things," he said. "Now for something to eat!"

Again he took up the local telephone. This time he instructed a chauffeur to tell the men riding about the bird sanctuary that their task was done.

By this time Dina knew the whole story. She was particularly incensed at the part played by Appleton's companion, the lady with the pleasing voice.

"You don't mean to say those dreadful people have escaped?"

"Impossible!" Pelham cried. "How do you know?"

"Some three hours ago," Hanby told them, "Doctor Grant was coming from a case, and saw a plump gentleman and a good looking woman at our upper entrance gates. They were soaked through—from the rain, he supposed—and had a reasonable story to tell. Their motor had stalled some where and they were on their way to get gas. Doctor Grant believed it, and took them as far as Stanfordville, where they bought a five gallon can and hired a car to take them back to their machine. The driver was told to go to the nearest railroad station. He did so, and received good pay and the can of gas. They took the ten thirty-five train to New York. I don't have to be a house detective or a Yale sophomore to guess who that drenched couple was."

"How did they get out of the sanctuary and make the upper road?"

"They went up the stream. We know there's a clear way, because Jim used to float the cases down. While we were losing our flesh and clothes in that d-d-thicket, they were wading in three feet of water to safety. Another thing—while they delayed us, the crowd at Boyle's made its getaway. Such a night as this—foggy, rainy, and moonless—was a godsend to them. The tracks were plain enough in Boyle's yard when we got there, but the rain has washed all marks from the paved roads."

"Then it won't be easy to trace them?" the professor hazarded.

"It won't be hard to trace forty-ton trucks making a convoy for Manhattan. They can't make more than twenty-five miles an hour, at the outside. They'll get them, and they'll get Appleton, too."

Here the telephone rang sharply. It was the local chief of police. He was angry and disappointed. He informed Hanby that, with his own men and prohibition enforcement officials, he had overtaken, held up, and searched a fleet of big trucks proceeding southward. They were laden only with building material, which had been carefully examined. In every instance they were driven by men whose alibis were genuine.

"Wow!" said Hanby, hanging up. "That was a hot one! It certainly proves that the amateur detective business is not as simple as it seems. What Applon or Jim did was to alter the destination of the booze ships. Instead of going toward Manhattan, they went into hiding."

Dina sensed deep depression in him. Her husband was a man who always played to win.

"Never mind!" she said, putting her arm about his shoulders, affectionately. "I'm proud of you all. You've given a husband back to Florence, and but for you I might have lost my son-in-law." She smiled at Leslie and Celia. "You've cleared up the great mystery!"

"Something is lost in every victory," Pelham reminded him.

Again the telephone disturbed them. Hanby, answering, raised his right hand, enjoying silence and attention. "Long distance," he whispered. "Listen, all of you!"

They crowded about the instrument. A distant central informed some one as yet unknown that here was his party.

"This is M. Hanby speaking," said the man at the instrument.

There floated up into the room the very clear articulation of Mr. Appleton.

"We wish to thank you," said Appleton, "for our opportunity to escape. Everything turned out as we desired. Jim reports the perfect success of his operations. Mrs. Appleton and I are now in New York. She was very much attracted by your personality. We both feel that we owe a great deal to you. Fortunately we can repay."

Hanby's face turned red. It infuriated him to have Appleton jeering at him over the long distance. He was commencing to tell Mr. Appleton what he thought of him when Dina tapped him on the arm.

"Listen!" she commanded.

"I am not lying when I say we can repay," Mr. Appleton remarked, when Hanby's recriminations were cut short. "Oh, dear me, no! As you will not see any of us again, I bequeath to you the contents of your own cellar. Even the law cannot take it away from you!"

(THE END)

"Jocko" Something of a Freak of Nature

A putty nose and a tail a yard long are among the attractions possessed by a monkey newly placed in the famous London zoo. It comes from the African Gold coast. These monkeys have weak circulations in their tails, for the blood has to be pumped so far by the heart. A touch of cold weather, and the tail winks like a dahlia in a frost. After stormy blasts in the bay of Biscay the average length of the decoration when the creature reaches this country is from six inches to a foot. Even if the tail is still all there, it has been blighted and fades away in the zoo.

Many putty-nosed monkeys eat their cold-stored tails. They are quite given to this habit until the zoo uses a certain red ointment, which spoils the flavor.

The new putty-nose was brought to England in wonderful condition by the donor, a Mr. Woodward, who is a laboratory expert at the Medical Research Institute at Sekondi, where the yellow fever scourge is tackled.—London Times.

THE HEATHER IN BLOOM

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

ELLEN WALLACE fastened the quaint old amethyst brooch carefully and her husband regarded her with satisfaction.

"You look nice, Ellen," he remarked, eyeing the smooth black silk gown, severely plain but of the best quality, and her soft bands of silvery-white hair. "How I wish I could take you over to Edinburgh; there are"—his voice held a note of pathos—"some of the old friends left. I'd like to show you Edinburgh castle by moonlight. I remember one night I was in the hotel across the street from the gardens that lie just below the hill that is topped by the pile of gray stones and—"

Ellen plinked. She glanced sharply at the pile of gayly tinted travel folders that the old man had been studying. "Eric, you are getting restless. Ever since that $2,000 was left me you have wanted to squander it on foreign travel. Of course"—her voice softened as she regarded the lean, lined face of the old Scotchman—"that queer place with the steep hills paved with rough cobblestones and the outlandish people with their kilts and bagpipes will always seem like home to you and I'd like to see old Bruce who lives alone on the heath with his collie dog for company, but I can't defraud my kin. Dick is my brother's son and I want to leave that $2,000 to him intact."

Eric sighed as she talked. It was true. Ever since the money had so unexpectedly arrived he had been thinking of Bonnie Scotland. An almost uncontrollable homesickness for his birthplace had seized him and he longed to feel the deck of an ocean liner beneath his feet and hear the watch boom out the bells. "It is your money, Ellen, but do you think that Dick really needs it? We have only a few years left at most and he is young. With youth one has enthusiasm—a future—the old have only their memories."

"Dick will do better soon," defended Ellen, although there was an odd dubiousness in her mind even as she spoke. "Sometimes I feel that Lucy must be extravagant or possibly quarrelsome for they—"

Eric nodded comprehendingly as Ellen's loyalty prevented further criticism of her kin, but he smiled inwardly as he listened to her belief in the in-law's culpability. Lucy was only a niece by marriage, consequently she must be at fault. Eric was convinced that Dick, the in-law to him, was worthless, lazy young fellow, who would probably never amount to anything, but he knew to voice his belief to Ellen would bring down a storm of angry words and would really grieve her. Therefore, he puffed away at his pipe and resumed his study of the fascinating travel folders. Two thousand dollars would give them a year abroad. "If I could only earn some money," thought the old captain restlessly, but the empty sleeve precluded such ambitions.

Ellen went on her way, but so perturbed was she from the thoughts aroused by Eric's speech that she completely forgot to telephone, according to her invariable custom, to Lucy announcing her arrival. Lucy lived at the other end of the town, and Ellen hated to go into a drug store and spend the necessary nickel. Long habits of thrift remained with her and a nickel dropped into an outside telephone seemed wasteful to her. She wanted to leave Dick as much as possible. "How they will enjoy our little cottage when we are through with it," she reflected tenderly. Every board and nail in the tiny place was surrounded by old memories of their happy youth. Eric had been the kindest of husbands and had worked and cherished her with all his strength. Most of the cottage had been built by his own hands—before the loss of the left arm. Here her sparkling blue eyes dimmed as she remembered his grief at having to give up active work to depend solely on his pension. This with the cottage sufficed, for they were accustomed to plain living, but now doubts assailed her as she recalled the longing in his face when he spoke of Scotland and his kinsmen. After all the money had been left to them to use and he wanted to travel. She remembered a time when she had craved a plush coat, although her dark cloth jacket was perfectly good. Eric had worked nights and earned enough to surprise her with the plush garment, and on her wedding anniversary she had worn the warm, silk-lined coat that enveloped her with fragrant warmth.

She was torn with doubts as she went up the steps of the rented house where Dick lived. The place looked shabby and uncared for, greatly in contrast with Ellen's neat cottage. "I would love to cross the ocean," she thought wistfully, Eric's wanderlust had seized her, but duty looked grimly ahead.

"I tell you I won't go and call on the Smith's baby. I don't care if they do get another doctor. The old woman can't last forever and that $2,000 will go a long way. Why should I wear myself out walking and working. The world owes me a living. I'm sorry I let her spend all that money to put me through medical college. I hate the work. When she drops off I'll buy a racing car and—"

Ellen's veined hand was pressed closely against her heart. Dick's voice, rough and shrill with anger, floated out from the open window and her breath came in little gasps. The pounding in her ears dulled his voice, but her extraordinarily sharp ears still heard clearly above the sound of her heartbeats.

"I wish," cried Lucy forlornly, "that you had no money coming to you; then you might brace up and make a living the same as other men do. Here we are in this run-down house with no prospects because you expect to step into the dear little cottage that your uncle built himself—"

There was an ugly snarl in Dick's laugh. "Dear little cottage," he mocked. "Do you think you're ever going to settle down in that? The inheritance will be absolutely mine and you'll never use that. I'll sell it the minute I get the place. Houses are at a premium now. I know a sure thing that I'll bet that—"

Ellen could not see the steps for the blinding tears that clouded her vision. Stumblingly she hurried down the street and into the drug store at the corner, where she went to the phone booth.

"Eric, come down here and get me," she said when his pleasant voice answered. "I—have had sort of a shock—take care of those travel folders because—"

Here a tiny ripple of joy ran through her halting speech. After all it was not too late. She could give Eric his heart's desire with no thought of duty to intervene. "We are going to Scotland very soon, and Eric"—unconsciously her hand was pressed against his heart—"I misjudged Lucy. Our little home shall be left to her instead of—that is—a new hesitancy crept into her tone, she had discovered that her judgment was not infallible—"if you think best."

"Whatever you like," he returned, as he always did. "Ellen, I'll bring the folders with me. Think, I'll be able to show you the Scotch heather in bloom on the hillside."

"We are going to Scotland very soon, and Eric"—unconsciously her hand was pressed against his heart—"I misjudged Lucy. Our little home shall be left to her instead of—that is—a new hesitancy crept into her tone, she had discovered that her judgment was not infallible—"if you think best."

"Whatever you like," he returned, as he always did. "Ellen, I'll bring the folders with me. Think, I'll be able to show you the Scotch heather in bloom on the hillside."

FAMILY DOCTOR LEARNED THIS ABOUT CONSTIPATION

Dr. Caldwell loved people. His years of practice convinced him many were ruining their health by careless selection of laxatives. He determined to write a harmless prescription which would get at the cause of constipation, and correct it.

Today, the prescription he wrote in 1885 is the world's most popular laxative! He prescribed a mixture of herbs and other pure ingredients now known as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, in thousands of cases where bad breath, coated tongue, gas, headaches, biliousness and lack of appetite or energy showed the bowels of men, women and children were sluggish. It proved successful in even the most obstinate cases: old folks liked it for it never gripes; children liked its pleasant taste. All drugstores today have Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin in bottles.

News Gathering Both Simple and Effective

Life in the highly sophisticated South Sea Isles is by no means as newsless as one might hazard by measuring the number of miles separating them from Fleet street (writes a globe-trotting correspondent). The Papeete planters have bestowed the pleasing name of coconut wireless on the means by which their wives and daughters keep up with all the news that really matters. Every sun-up the native maids meet at the market-place and pool the previous day's domestic log while they do the forthcoming day's shopping. These reporters bring back their gleanings to the housewife news editors, who publish to their yawning spouses, over the breakfast coffee, "All the News That's Fit to Print" (and a great deal that isn't). In consequence, what every family does not know about every other family can positively be sprawled across the head of a pin.

Save the Fine Laundry

20 Mule Team Borax is a great help. It softens water, aids soap, and deodorizes as it cleanses. Eliminates hard rubbing, whitens clothes, and is perfectly harmless. Borax saves the hands and saves fine laundry, too.—Adv.

On Three Wheels

Three-wheeled trucks are being extensively introduced in London for the delivery of freight and merchandise. They are much more mobile than the four-wheeled kind and seem to answer most purposes. A car can almost be turned in its own length and the pliability of the truck in congested parking is wonderful. The three-wheeled truck was tried here years ago, but was never able to make a hit. It looked too much like a motorcycle with a side car. But they are worth looking at anyhow.—Los Angeles Times.

Light at the Poles

In speaking of the period of darkness at the poles, complete darkness is not implied, but rather a sort of twilight. There is sufficient light for ordinary activities to be carried on.

She Knew

per cent of the so-called western shore line road gives a full view of the waters of Lake Michigan. He expressed the desire of having the eastern shore line road more accessible to water viewing. He stated he was in full sympathy with shore line roads and was a big booster for them but he did not advocate the abandoning of old roads to secure shore line routes. In this respect he referred to the construction of U. S. 23 and M-76 as important trunk line roads worthy of further construction work.

Federal agent Vashell was called upon. He stated Congress appropriated $75,000,000 for roads, of which Michigan receives $2,500,000. He did not give any definite expression as to shore line or inland roads but declared himself as being in full accord with progressive road building, whether it be for shore lines or not, so long as the proposed roads were proved worthy.

Congressman Roy O. Woodruff expressed himself as being in favor of more Federal aid. Also that Michigan was backward in good roads. He referred to Europe as having good roads all over and supplying cheap transportation for farm produce. He believed farming can be made to pay better returns in Northeastern Michigan with the aid of paved roads inasmuch as they supply ways of cheaper transportation. He expressed a desire to see a road leading to resort districts, particularly in our section of the state, believing it to be a means of gaining better returns. He also advocated the construction of inland roads and referred to U. S. 23 and M-76 as such roads that should be improved in cooperation with the shore line project. He also called attention to the fact that cooperation was necessary in all instances as did Representative McKinnon of Bay City. The latter referred to the inconsistency of the arguments between Bay City and Saginaw on the River Road. He stated the road could have been completed much sooner if cooperation had been indulged in. He suggested that complete cooperation be fully adhered to in constructing the Shore Line road and other road routes in this section of Northeastern Michigan—Arenac County Independent.
