Gun Swinging Career Ends When Hit by Beer Bottle

After telling the bartender to call the sheriff and state police, Daniel W. Lange, with fully loaded Mauser automatic in hand, "took over" Tuesday night in Kocher's Tavern at Hale. Flourishing the gun over the terrorized patherns. rons, Lange stepped behind the bar and took on the duties which he held until he was arrested by Deputy Sheriff Herman Huber after he had been hit by a beer bottle thrown by Bartender Rod Bertch and nearby men in the tavern had grabbed him.

Lange left his home with the Mauser in his pocket. He ended up at Kocher's Tavern, where he did some drinking before entering his gun swinging career. He is 24 years old, had served in World War II, and had recently served a ten day sentence for reckless driving. PEACE PACT: Avenue to War?

As he did in the Taft-Hartley repeal fight, Sen. Robert Taft (R., Ohio) would lead the opposition to senate ratification of the Atlantic pact. That is the treaty in which America joins its western allies in an agreement that an attack on any signatory is an at-tack upon all—and that a signatory nation may take any reprisal steps it deems fit.

IN HIS SPEECH to the senate, Taft declared the pact was "in-extricably linked" to the rearming of Europe, insisted this would lead to an armament race and pointed out that "armament races lead to

Thus did a highly effective sen-ator most coherently raise the question of whether the pact really means peace or war. Taft was not without support in his conception of the pact's potentialities. Five senators jumped to their feet to applaud his remarks, and some 12 or 15 senators were applauding at the end.

This was construed by some observers as indicating the extent of the opposition.

Taft was not wholly against the pact, despite his ringing denunciation. He asserted that, even now, he would be willing to change his mind if a reservation could be incorporated into ratification making plain that the treaty did not bind America to furnish arms.

Said Taft: "There is no question that the arms program and the treaty were negotiated together. There is no question in my mind that foreign nations which signed e military aid. I believe we will at once be accused of repudiation, and the pact will be completely discredited."

The committee also tied up 50 million dollars of what was left in order to cut Spain in on the European recovery program should the administration see fit. The program would get something more than 3.75 billions. President Truman had asked approximately 4.20 billions. Wrong Job?

You may be happy in your work and pleased with your occupational niche, but the fellow at the desk or machine next to you may not be.

It is the opinion of Robert C. Woellner, Chicago university professor, that at least half of all adults definitely are misplaced, or could have been better placed if modern vocational methods had been available during their formative years.

Woellner attributes much of the present social unrest, high divorce rate, and high incidence of mental illness in the United States to the many unfortunate occupational choices of its workers.

U.S. ECONOMY:

Truman Concedes

While there was some measure of contradiction in concept, President Truman, in his message to congress on the economic state of the nation had conceded that recession forces were alive.

However, in a neat bit of linguistic maneuvering, he declared the current situation one in which the national economy was in orderly retreat from a serious inflation. At the same time, however paradoxical the warning might seem, he declared that there could be "greater economic folly" than an attempt to balance the federal budget in a "declining national economy."

He highlighted the contradiction the treaty regarded the providing by adding that such a move would of arms as an essential part of it only aggravate the recession if we ratify the pact and fail forces against which his new policy was directed.

OF CHIEF INTEREST in his report was his abandonment of an earlier plan to demand four billion dollars in additional taxes. He lightly dismissed this former policy with the statement: "No major increase in taxes should be undertaken at this time." Instead, he proposed liberalization of allowances for past losses in computing income taxes and increasing estate and gift taxes.

The President's obvious reversal of policy was held to be little less pronounced than the findings of his council of economic advisors on whose report the President's message was based. They found that since January the forces threatening stability had become predominantly deflationary and that the weakening of markets had become general.

KRUG:

A Denial

Drew Pearson was in hot water again. Generally accused of partial approximately 749 million dollars responsibility in the suicidal death of former defense secretary James Forrestal, the newspaper and radio columnist had reported the U. S. interior secretary Krug was very ill with "athlete's heart."

In a letter to Pearson, Krug's months ending June 30, 1950. This asserted Krug is completely well and able to do twice the work of

REUTHER:

With red-thatched, fiery Walter Reuther still at the helm, the United Auto Workers union, numbering some million members, could be expected to hold firm in any demands made for wage increases or social benefits.

BRUSHING aside token opposition from UAW's left wing elements, Reuther was elected to a third term as UAW president by a

The voting which reelected Reuther was a new triumph for the right-wing forces in the union which catapulted him into office in 1946 and rewarded him with control of the other international offices and the board at the 1947 convention. His new term will expire in April, 1951.

UAW DELEGATES moved into the election of top officers after hearing Leon Keyserling, of President Truman's council of economic advisers, tell them that "as a gen-eral proposition the kind of wage policy which will help maintain full employment in this country, and which will maintain our economy on stable levels is one which adds to consumer purchasing power from year to year-because we have the capacity to produce more goods from year to year.

The auto workers union's big fight was with Ford motor company which, in opposing proposed wage rates, offered to peg wages at present levels for a given period, regardless of what cost-of-living developments brought about.

FORD contended the cost of living has gone down and there was no justification for pay raises, basing the argument on the UAW contract which called for pay hikes as the cost-of-living increased. Reuther opposed that line of reasoning, contending that the union's economists have proved, by a survey, that most industries can afford wage increases now.

MONOPOLY:

Clark Agitated

While President Truman was delighting business generally with his abandonment of any tax-increase proposals, U. S. Attorney General Tom Clark was agitated over the growth of "big" business and urging curbs on "concentra-tion of economic power."

CLARK APPEARED very much disturbed by the situation and let go both barrels in his shots at big business as he testified in a congressional investigation into monopolistic practices.

He termed business monopoly an "economic blackjack" and urged that the federal government get busy doing something about it. He told a house judiciary subcommit-tee that most people were victims of three erroneous assumptions. He listed them as:

1. Assumption that competition continues to thrive as long as there are at least two or three or four in the field.

2. Assumption that the bigger the producer the better the quality of the goods and the cheaper the price to the public.

3. Assumption that companies become big because they deserve to be big-in other words, that they outdistance their competitors because they do a better job, render a greater service, or furnish better goods.

CLARK DECLARED he did not share any of these assumptions. Continuing his testimony before the committee, he said:

"The fundamental issue is whether the economy of this country is to remain free and competitive, or whether it is to be subjected to private regimentation through monopoly control.'

As an aftermath of the involved legal proceedings in the trial of Alger Hiss on a perjury charge growing out of spy investigations, Presiding Judge Samuel H. Kaufman, shown here, is under congressional fire. The senator was reported considering a probe of the conduct of the trial.

BIG STEEL:

After conferences with federal conciliation director Cyrus S. Ching, the CIO chieftian reported a "complete deadlock." The situation was critical.

Oliver Davillier and Senor Alfredo Valle Indan, both of whom had long ago won his respect and admiration.

He was an unpretentious looking little man, this Professor Cheswick, with pale blue eyes and hornrimmed glasses and a pasty complexion. He wasn't one to attract attention or to assert himself. He went about with a perpetual faraway look in his eyes.

There came a time when a probem presented itself that challenged his skill and knowledge. He labored over it for days. The days became weeks and the weeks months. At last, worn and haggard, the little man was ready to admit defeat.

Time after time he returned to it, only to find himself defeated. He visited every library within miles, read every book by Davilliar and Indan, as well as other great scientists that was available, but without finding the answer.

In the end Professor Cheswick had an idea. It was summer. He needed a vacation. Why not take a month off, visit Europe and perhaps call on Davillier and Indan and ask them personally to clear up the matter that so burdened his

He was glad when the boat docked. Eagerly he looked ahead to his meeting with Mons. Davillier.

But alas! The next day Professor Cheswick learned that Mons. Davillier had gone to America for his summer holiday and was not expected to return for another month.

The little scientist was depressed and disappointed. His time was short. Madrid, where lived Senor Indan was a long way off. Yet it could be reached, he thought suddenly and excitedly, by plane in a very short while.

HE WAS DELIGHTED to learn that Senor Indan was in Madrid. Yes, it was difficult to obtain an

Ah, yes, Senor Indan was requested to solve so many problems. It was very, very doubtful if he would, grant an interview for such a slight matter. However, if the American would care to take his chances, Senor Indan was to appear at a reception on Tuesday night. Possibly there would be an oppor-

> Professor Cheswick attended the reception. He stood in line for hours, a quiet, unassuming, unimportant looking little man, waiting for his chance to speak to the great Senor Indan. It came at last. At last the Mapleridge school teacher and scientist stood before the man he respected more than anyone else in the world.

He was so overcome by awe that for a moment he just stared. Senor Indan frowned impatiently and Professor Cheswick found his voice. He stated his question. The Senor's brows arched in surprise.

"An unusual question, Senor," he said. "Frankly, I cannot answer it. There is only one man in the world with enough knowledge and learning to find the answer. He is one of your own countrymen. My good friend Mons. Davillier is at this moment in America seeking an interview with this wizard whom the whole scientific world respects and admires, yet who is so absorbed in his work that it is difficult to persuade him to appear ir public. I refer to Professor Aaron Cheswick of Mapleridge college."

Communist Fallacy

LAST WEEK your Home Town Reporter gave the results of a poll on the question of whether or not we were moving toward a socialist government in this country, and the answers received from the home towns and rural areas of the nation were overwhelmingly in the

And while this gives us a feeling of satisfaction and security that our farmers and the people in the rural communities have their feet firmly implanted on the solid rock of democracy, individual freedom and the dignity of man, there were several answers upon which we touched in last week's column which lead us to wonder just how farreaching some of the fallacious communistic propaganda has spread. One such letter was from the man in Oregon who said many of his neighbors believed in "Christian communism." This man went on to say that after much study "I have finally concluded the Bible in spirit taught Christian communism. . . . a spiritual interpretation of the Bible teaches peace and Christian communism.

As we pointed out last week the word "Christian" and the word "communism" are direct opposites and there can be no such thing as a Christian Communist. Communism is anti-God and anti-Christ.

The martyrdom of Cardinal Mindszenty and the 13 protestant ministers in Hungary, of Cardinal Stepinac in Yugoslavia and lately the program against Archbishop Beran and the church in Czechoslowakia and against all religion in Russia and the iron curtain countries is indicative of this antispiritual, anti-God stand of Marxian communism.

Everywhere behind the iron curtain communism has been openly at war not only with genuine political democracy, but also with religion of every type that recognizes man as a child of God and not the creature of the state. This Godless tyranny, by its very nature, is driven to do battle against Godfearing freedom because the two cannot exist side by side.

Communism judges man to be nothing but an animal to be regimented, so Red totalitarianism must fight any political philosophy which gives him dignity and makes him free. And it must fight any religion which endows him with a soul, teaches him standards of goodness and tells him that God alone is his true master, not the state. So we hope that the confused, fallacious thinking of this man from Oregon as indicated by replies we received is even less than the 1 per cent indicated by the responses to our query.

Taft Stock Soars

The stock of Sen. Robert A. Taft of Ohio, who comes up for reelection to the senate next year, has soared as a result of his recent personal victory over the administration forces on the Taft-Hartley law in the senate.

An insight into Senator Taft's characteristic aplomb is shown upon his return to his office in the senate office building following his dramatic victory in the senate. His office staff had congregated in his private office to congratulate him, and hear from his own lips the story of the victory in a roundtable bull session. The tall Ohioan strode into his office with a broad grin and wearing a new synthetic panama hat.

"How do you like my new hat" he remarked and that is all the staff heard about the Senator's personal victory after days of furious debate on the Senator Taft, by the way, for all his seniority in the Republican party has a small staff and a modest unpretentious office, compared to some in the senate office building. Chief decoration are scores of herds of elephants, in gold, in bronze, in ivory, in every conceivable shape and color. Next are many, many pictures of the senator's father, the former President and chief justice of the supreme court, William Howard Taft.

New Columnist

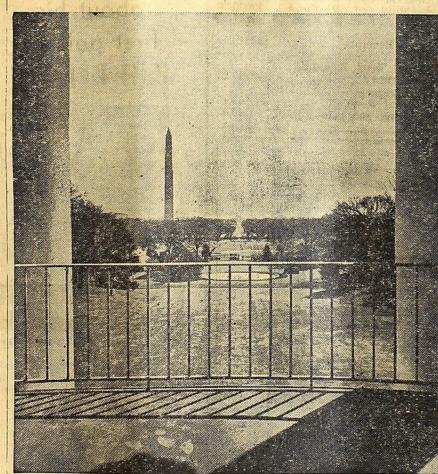

And while we are on the subject of Senator Taft, he has joined the ranks of the columnists and is writing a weekly column for newspapers in his home state. Some Washington columnists were somewhat worried lest the senator, whose word is news, "could score "beats" over the regular columnists from his inside knowledge of events to come. In his first column he wrote," I shall try to report just what goes on in Congress and to clarify the issues

God Can Be Trusted

Lesson for July 31, 1949

EVEN if you do nothing else with this lesson, it will be a good thing to learn by heart some of the Psalms of Trust which have been selected for your study this week. They are far too rich to be treated in one column.

Who Can Trust in God?

(PSALM 34:16-22.) Not every one has a right to trust in God. Those who do not believe in him, do not love him, work against him, try to break down and corrupt those who do believe in him - these need expect nothing at his hand. But there are three classes of persons who are encouraged to put their trust in God. One is the "contrite," the repen- Dr. Foreman tant, those who sincerely wish to be cut free from their sins-these can surely trust in God for forgiveness. One who cannot trust God for forgiveness has no right to trust him for anything else. Then the "righteous," as the Psalmist calls them, have a right to trust in God.

If that word means only the perfectly and altogether good people, it would leave all of us out. But in the light of the Bible as a whole, the righteous are those whose dominant desire is to love and serve God.

Their service is imperfect, their love is far from perfect, and no man is without sin. But if you can say with Peter, "Lord, thou know-est that I love thee," then you have a right to trust in God. Also the broken-hearted can safely trust in him. Whoever else may break your heart, God will not. He is the great Mender of hearts. For the little sorrows there may be lesser, comforters; but the real heartbreaks only God can cure.

Why Trust God?

PSALM 37 gives one answer: The opposite of trust is worry, and worry never did any good at all. Worry eats into the mind, casts no light, gives no strength, solves no problems, worry makes any trouble worse. Then the writer of Psalm 30 gives another reason for trust: he had tried it. If trust in God were simply a doctrine of theology or a theory of preachers, not many people would take it seriously.

Trust is really passed on by a kind of contagion from heart to heart. If there are not more people who know what trust means, it is because those who have known have kept it too much to themselves.

It would be a wonderful stimulus to most churches to have a little "cell" of people who would really agree to trust God every day.

When to Trust in God

ONe of Dicken's famous characters used to make a great point of being cheerful under the most un-cheerful circumstances. Anybody can be jolly when everything is lovely, he said. There's no credit in not worrying when there's nothing to worry about. Although the writers of the Bible, one and all, trusted in God, not one had an easy life. Read Psalm 46, for example; it gives a picture of a world much like ours of today, shaken to its foundations, torn by wars, a desolate, discouraged world. If it made sense to trust only under bright skies, religion would have perished long ago.

For What Shall We Trust God?

NO ONE PSALM puts the whole truth in one nutshell. If you read Psalm 91, for example, by itself, it would seem to prove that if you trust in God you will never die a violent death, nor an early one; but too many saints (and indeed our Lord himself) had died early and violent deaths, for us to take Psalm 91 in that way. Trusting in God does not mean he will give us long life. It means he will give us strength to match our days.

It does mean he will give us all we need. It does not mean we shall be shielded from troubles. It does mean he will save us from troubles greater than we can bear. It does not mean that in this life we shall be wholly free from burdens or from pain; It does mean we have strength in our souls (Ps. 138:3).

Which is the greater thing-to be a weakling wearied by a straw's weight, or to be one of God's athletes, able to bear the worst the world can pile on?

It was during Franklin D. Roosevelt's third term that a grammarschool pupil was asked how he was getting along with his studies. He explained that he studied just hard enough to get passing grades.

"Oh, that will never do," said his shocked aunt, "don't you know that if you don't study very hard you will never grow up to be President of the United States?" "I don't expect to, anyway," replied the lad with complete lack of ambition, "I'm a Republican."

An Englishman was sent by his company to investigate the possibilities of drilling oil wells in the wilds of Venezuela. He had been there a few days and had become quite chummy with a man who spoke English well. He was uncertain, however, of the man's nationality. He might have been an American or he might have been a Venezuelan who had learned English.

One day the Englishman asked the man, "Are you a foreigner here, too?"

The fellow gazed at him indig-nantly. "Foreigner?" he de-manded wrathfully. "No! I'm an American."

Director Frank Humberger of the East Tawas High School and Community band was in Monday with some publicity for the forth coming band concert July 31 at the East Tawas State Park. The conversation turned to baseball and that the band would attend Attorney for Mortgagee a Tiger game as guests of the East Tawas businessmen later in the season. As Mr. Humberger reminisced about his younger days he told a story of his early life in Detroit. During the days when Ty Cobb played and managed the Detroit ball club, he was a member of Bill Finzel's band and played with them for a couple of opening day ceremonies. On this particular day the band had marched to the flag pole and then were seated in the the customary band stand along the side lines. As each player came up to bat, the band would strike up a tune appropriate to the batter.

When Cobb came up, Finzel's and struck up "Marching band struck up "Marching Through Georgia." This sent the "Georgia Peach" on a rampage and all through the game Manager Cobb sent dirty looks and dire mutterings toward the band stand. The next day, Detroit papers carried a story by Cobb, in retaliation, against band leader Finzel, who had played the uncomplimentary tune.

By Ertta Haley

THOSE CLOTHES you started wearing a month or so ago don't look as fresh and crisp as they did when you first put them on, you say? Naturally you've laundered them or had them cleaned but just what has hap-

The same thing happens about the middle of every season, be it winter, summer, spring or fall. Most of us can't afford new clothes, and probably wouldn't buy them for the few remaining weeks of the summer, so what should be done?

Naturally this varies with each individual piece of clothing, but there are some definite tricks to revive or restore them to original freshness. No major remodeling is essential, usually, unless you've gained or lost weight, but some slight touch may make the difference between a piece of clothing you really want to wear and one you'd like to hide in a dark corner of the closet.

True Cleanliness

Revives Dresses, Suits You may have been fairly regular about having dresses and suits laundered or cleaned, but unless special care is taken, they may take on a sort of dusty hue which detracts from their beauty.

In many instances, a special laundering or cleaning treatment may solve the problem of making Revive dresses with trimmings these items a pleasure to wear Check over collar, cuffs, pockets and hemlines. If you find any dirt at all, concentrate on this special spot and make it immaculate.

If the suit or dress does not hang just right, you may have to do some minor adjusting for perfect fit. This involves practically no time at all and renders the garment wearable.

Sometimes a dress simply needs to have the hemline shifted or new shoulder pads, and it will pick up amazingly well.

Other points to check on gar-ments include the belt and its buckle. They fray easily some-times and detract from the dress, coat or suit. Mending may eliminate this problem; if not, revive the dress with a new belt or buckle.

Most women used to do a lot of changing with trimmings to refresh their clothing. This is an old fashloned habit which we would do well to revive because so often the frag-ile laces on blouses need changing, as do collars and cuffs. For basic dresses, you would do well to make or buy an alternate set if you really want to get the most wear out of the garment.

Clothes which have faded badly may simply need a bit of tinting to restore their good looks. Tinting | On Your Hats does not mean dyeing. It can be Most summer headgear needs a done easily in the wash basin if pick-up just about this time, and Short on luggage space for the week-end invitation to which you've been looking forward? One good answer is one of the pretty ensembles that are designed for just such contingencies. Take the four-piece costume such as the one sketched. It includes a swim suit, a twopiece sun dress, and, with the addition of a glistening white T-shirt, a spectator sports dress. One of the most popular fabrics for these ensembles is cotton poplin, but you may also cheose heavy broadcloth, in-dianhead, or spun rayon in a heavy linen-like weave. Estelle, my answer is that you and your brother are risking your own marital happiness by this unrealistic attitude toward what is a terrible tragedy.

But the sensible course for you, the most hopeful and promising one, the least expensive and the most responsible, is to place your mother in the state institution, and begin to work for her comfort, your own, your husband's and your children's welfare, from there.

Tears glistened in his eyes as Homer Croy drove along the country road amid the scenes of his childhood. A prodigal son of northwest Missouri, he was going "home"-back to the Kennedy place where he had had such fun as a child. He remembered the happy times he had with the Kennedys-Newt, the kindest man he had ever known; Mrs. Kennedy; their two girls, Lucy and Ida, like older sisters to him; Harlan, his childhood playmate. Then he remembered, but with terrifying vividness, the vaccinating by Newt and the tensity that moved over the people. For smallpox, the thing they dreaded most, threatened, a tramp having been found dead of the disease.

The grown-up people had been vaccinated, so now the children. I can see us children going toward the house, all knowing something dreadful was going to happen; but our fathers and mothers were taking us, so everything must be all

The men come up from the barn lot; they don't go in the house but stand outside, talking in low tones.

Ida and Lucy move here and there, looking after the young children. Grandpa sits behind the kitchen stove.

Newt takes off his coat, dips water out of the reservoir, washes his hands and dries them on the roller towel.

He pretends to be cheerful, "Well, boys and girls! we've got a little business to attend to, but it won't take long and won't hurt much and it'll soon be over."

He goes into the sitting room, but instead of its usual cheerful appearance the room is bare except for a table, some glasses, cotton batting and a drugstore box. By the side of the table are two empty, ominous chairs.

"Who wants to be first?" he asks. Nobody wants to be first; in fact no one wants to be at all. But the crowd, the occasion, the intensity, the importance-these can no more resisted than wind from the

A terrified girl is coaxed into one of the chairs and Newt sits down in front of her and tries to smile. He pats her and tells her she is a nice girl, but she is not deceived. Trouble is coming. And it does come. for he begins to roll up her left sleeve; there is her white arm and it is trembling and so-I verily believe now that I am older and have a child of my own—is Newt.

A tense, heavy-breathing silence falls over all, back and forth the Nobody wanted to buy it because it eratcher goes, blood rolls down the white arm. And now the most trying moment of all. Newt picks up one of the "points" made out of white bone about the size of a steel pen and shaped somewhat like it. Broad and rounded at one end, tapered at the other. Ah! I have no trouble seeing it. Nor feeling it, either. For I carry its scar today.

'A Stranger

In Our Midst'

On the end was the "medicine." Into the living flesh he thrusts the point and holds it there, moving it and wiping it so the virus will come off. Then drops it into the coal Until now, vitamin A, necessary bucket. Now it's time for the bandfor the growth of children, the norage and time for the little girl to cry. It is all right to cry afterward, vision, and other physiological needs of the body, including resistbut if you are brave you won't cry until all is over.

One after another, the children go up to Newt who is no longer trying to be cheerful. Then comes my time and I go up and I die . .

or so it seems.

At last it is all over; there is a spatter of white bones in the coal bucket; the children are going about with their left arms drawn up. The men come in from the outside and there is laughing and talking; and now the fathers find chairs and get to hold the children on their laps. Mrs. Kennedy takes the dishpan from the top of the range and strips the cover off the pan-it is filled with pink-colored, sugar-coated pop-corn, heavenly balls. In a moment we each have a ball in our right hand and are gnawing away like puppies at bones. Newt goes anxiously from child to child, making friendly advances.

Time to go home. The men who had so quietly tied their teams, now untie them, calling back and forth to each other as they do so. Newt goes from buggy to buggy and from child to child just to make sure he is forgiven. He is. No one could really hold out against friendly, understanding Newt.

In 1936, the prominent British chemist Sir Ian Heilbron made The next day we are in school again; no rough games now. No some headway toward synthesis by running games; no prisoner's base, no anteover.

'varioloid" and came out with only one mark on my face.

Our farmers were a sort of aristocracy of the soil. They had always lived on their farms; they always expected to. Sometimes, however, a farmer decided to "retire," move to town and "take it easy." But, when he got to town, there was nothing to do. He would come downtown and sit on a park bench in the courthouse yard and watch the teams go by. At noon he would walk slowly home; after dinner he would walk slowly down-town again. He would go into the harness store and talk to Mr. Wadley. After a while he would be on the park bench again, watching the teams go by. It was hard work. He soon died.

There was always tremendous interest when a farm "changed hands." This meant a new neighbor was coming in. Usually this person was from another school district, or another township, or another county. Sometimes a farmer crossed the line from Iowa. Sometimes a farmer moved in from Nebraska, mostly from the hardpan section. But this wasn't often. Most of the farms changed hands to people we knew.

Behind the poor farm was a miserable, run-down, horse-weedridden farm of forty acres. It was most unusual to have a farm of this number of acres, for farms are not so divided. It had this strange number of acres because the county had bought a farm for its inmates and there had been this much left over. was too small In addition it was situated behind the poor farm; the house was so far back you couldn't see it from the road. There was a wooden gate, that led to the house; you had to get out and open the gate, then shut and wire it behind you. The farm was what we called "in litigation"; no one wanted to buy a farm where the heirs were fighting. Also the farm was run down; gullies big enough to throw a henhouse into. The house was run

We heard the farm had "changed hands." That was all anyone knew. Then came the news it had changed hands to a "foreigner."

There were no foreigners in our section. Sometimes a family had a grandpa or grandma who spoke with a German or a Swedish accent; that was all. Then came the startling news that the farm had changed hands to a Russian. None of us had ever seen a Russian; all we knew was that they threw their brides out of their sleighs to the wolves. We didn't want that to get started in our neighborhood.

A Welcome Party For the 'Foreigners'

When he moved in he had his things on a two-wheeled wagon drawn by one horse. The horse had big brass hames and over the hames was an arch. None of us had ever seen such a way of doing; nor even heard of such a way. Our people, when they moved onto a new farm, had big two-horse wagons and, sometimes, had to take two or three The last thing in the world we wanted was an outlandish man like that living in our neighborhood. Trying to farm with one horse! It would take at least two horses, even for a farm of that size. But there he was with one horse and several children. On top of this he had a queer beard and wore a fur thing on his head that was about halfway between a hat and a cap.

We found his name was Delinsky. He may really have been a Pole, but to us he was a "Rooshan."

Mr. Willhoyte went over to ask if there was anything he could do for ly from our vaccination. Some of him. The man looked at him fierceus developed unduly sore arms, but ly and made him understand that he didn't want anything to do with

Other things came to light. He well, for I had what was called made his wife work in the field.

None of our farmers ever made their wives do that.

We found out also that he sometimes teamed a cow with his horse. That was the lowest yet. The worst thing that had ever happened to our section was when this Anton Delinsky moved in. The oldest was a boy named Leonard who seemed as strange and eccentric as his father. The oldest girl was Lizzie; she started at our school. She had tremendous brass earrings; her hair was in plaits and she wore boots. No girl wore hightopped boots to school; the boys did, but not the girls. She didn't have a tin dinner bucket, as the rest of us had, but brought her eating in a brown paper parcel. At noon we stared at the outlandish things that came out of that brown paper parcel; we laughed and snickered.

All our people didn't go to church, but no one would have dreamed of working on the Sabbath unless it was to save a crop. But Anton Delinsky got out his horse and single-shovel and plowed on Sun-

They went to town in their ridiculous one-horse wagon with the brass hames and the big arch, and tied to the hitch racks. People walked by just to see the contraption. Anton Delinsky, with his wife and his children, walked up and down the street together as if afraid to separate. They spoke to no one; hardly anyone spoke to them.

The word got out to have nothing to do with them.

Then Newt announced he was going to give them a Welcome Party. This was always done when a new family moved in; but the Delinskys were not the kind of people we wanted to welcome. It would be bettereif they pulled out. But Newt's kindness of heart and his friendliness toward everybody made him go ahead.

The neighbors were given the news, but they held back. It was just as well not to encourage the Delinskys.

Lizzie was told the plans; the family was to come on a certain night. Lizzie didn't seem to understand very well.

It was the custom for the family, in whose honor the party was given, to wait and come in last; this made it a kind of ceremony. Lots of laughing and good feeling, then.

Suspense hung over the household like August heat over a cornfield. Chores were done early, the family scrambled about getting dressed.

Ida looked out the window and said, "There's a lantern coming."

It was early; maybe it was one of the neighbors coming to help with the work.

We saw it was the Delinskys. We looked at each other, flabbergasted; when they came in there were Mr. and Mrs. Delinsky and Lizzie and Leonard (which was the number we had expected) and three small children; and Mrs. Delinsky was carrying a baby in her arms.

The Party Proves

A Painful Ordeal

People never brought a baby to a party and, for that matter, they didn't bring small children, either; these were left at home with Grandpa or Grandma. But there was no Grandpa or Grandma in the Delinsky family; and they didn't know any neighbor they could get to come in and stay with the children, so here they were.

Newt and Mrs. Kennedy went heartily forward, but they couldn't talk to them; the Delinskys stood with their children staring at the sitting room and not saying a word. Finally, after a great deal of pointing and gesturing and sign making, an old cradle was hauled out and a place fixed for it in the downstairs bedroom; then, without saying a word, the queer Delinskys pulled chairs back, placed them in a row against the wall and sat down as stiffly as if in church.

The Delinskys were in the way during the last-minute rush, but they didn't seem to know this; just sat and stared at everything in the People began arriving; they blew out their lanterns and set them in a row on the front porch. Mrs. Kennedy tried to introduce the silent Delinskys; each time the Delinskys would say something in a foreign language, then again stare silently around the room. Lizzie was asked to interpret, but was so ill at ease that she made a bad job of it and, finally, Newt and Minnie gave up trying to use her.

Leonard, in his ridiculous clothes, sat gazing silently at Ida because of her good looks. But Ida didn't want anything to do with such an oddity.

Only once did Mr. and Mrs. Delinsky show the slightest interest in what was going on; this was when one of the neighbors arrived with a basket of food. Mr. and Mrs. Delinsky glanced at each other . . then again stared silently around the room.

Their presence threw a pall over everybody; now and then one of the neighbors would make friendly advances, but got no encouragement. The people talked about crops, the price of hogs and who was sick, but without the deep interest these subjects always had. For there were the silent, crazy foreigners.

. . . A man moved into a bachelor apartment, taking a one-year lease. Two months later he moved out, complaining that he couldn't bear the foul language of the family in the adjoining apartment. When the landlord sued him for the balance of the year's rent, the man argued that the landlord himself was to he didn't actually encourage it.

A drunken customer in a bar began to get boisterous, and the bartender decided to eject him. He threw the man out so vigorously that the drunk crashed into a girl walking past the front entrance. Injured by the collision, the girl sued the bartender for damages. He protested that he was just exercising his right to get rid of an obnoxious customer, but the court held him responsible anyhow. The judge said that, while the bouncing was all right, it should have been done with regard for the safety of passers-by.

May a Landlord "Smoke Out" A Tenant Who Won't Move?

A landlord served an eviction notice on an elderly widow and she agreed to get out by a certain date. But when the day arrived, the woman happened to be sick in bed-and so she didn't leave. In a fury, the landlord opened the wood stove, poured some water on the embers, and "let it smoke." The harassed woman finally got out-but later filed a suit against the landlord for assault. He protested that a tenant blame for allowing such uncouth has no right to remain on the premlanguage in the building. But the vises after the eviction date. PATTERSON

Statehood For Hawaii

MORE THAN HALF A century ago the people of the then Republic of Hawaii asked that their islands be annexed to the United States, with a promise of future statehood. The first annexation legislation by congress was vetoed by President Cleveland in the closing days of his second administration. tration. During the McKinley ad-ministration, with the war with Spain as an urge, a joint resolution passed by the senate and house, admitted the islands as a territory with an implied promise of early statehood.

Through congress after congress, for the last half century, excuses have been found for not keeping that implied promise to the people of Hawaii. Some of the reasonsnot the excuses-have been purely partisan. Hawaii, as a state, would undoubtedly send two Republican senators, and at least one Republican representative to Washington. Such conditions were not inducive to statehood legislation under Democratic administrations, or with a Democratic house and senate. The armed forces, dominant in Hawaii, opposed statehood on the claims of disloyalty of the oriental residents, despite the showing of those orientals in the two world wars. Personal political antagonisms in the islands had some effect in helping to stop statehood.

As a territory Hawaii pays into the federal treasury as federal taxes more than any one of 12 of the 48 states. The islands' economy is based on sugar cane and pineapples. That presumably calls for oriental labor, but that to-day is Hawaiian born labor. The importation of Japanese and Chinese stopped with annexation. The island-born orientals employed on the sugar cane and pineapple plantations are paid higher wages, have better liv-ing conditions, than is true of farm labor in any section of continental United States. Congress permits the island plantations but a limited market in continental United States for its sugar in order to provide a market for Cuba.

Hawaii is a territory with a federal appointed governor and a territorial elected legislature with but a limited authority. The islands are not in a position to cope with internal or external difficulties as a state government would be. Help for her difficulties must come from Washington, if it comes at all.

Again partisanship enters into the picture. The Washington administration feels under obligation to the labor bosses. It is not included to do anything that would antagonize those labor bosses, such as Harry Bridges and his longshoreman's union. The labor bosses are presumed to control more votes than the half a million American citizens in the islands, who have no votes in any national election. To move food and other needed supplies in, the island products out. would not be acceptable to the union bosses, and the island people are left to the mercy (?) of Harry Bridges and such influence as may be behind him.

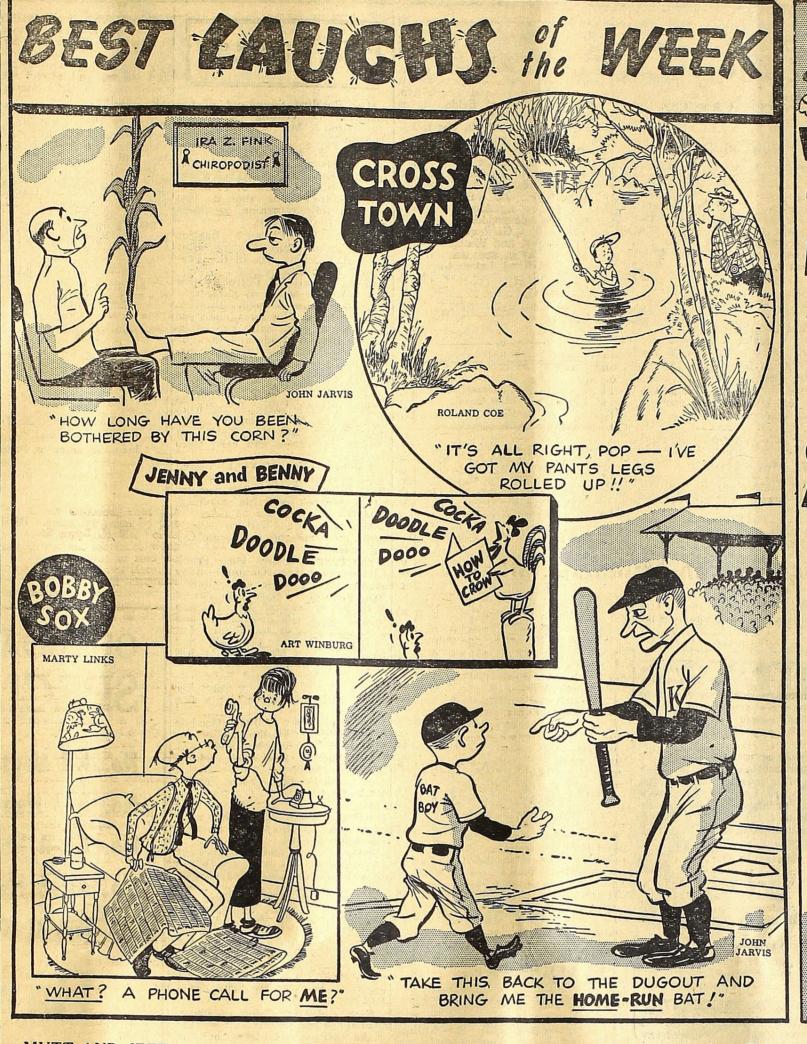

In the 80th congress the house passed the bill admitting Hawaii as the 49th state. It was blocked in the senate by a senate committee, some members of which wished to make a legislative jaunt to the islands, presumable to secure first hand information, but in reality only for a free ride.

The Hawaiian islands are a valuable acquisition of the United States. As an American outpost they undoubtedly prevented a Japanese attack on our Pacific coast in World War II. As an outpost under federal control the island people suf-ferred all the rigors of severe military discipline inflicted by the armed forces. Now they are suffering hunger, shortages, the destruction of local business, at the instigation of Harry Bridges, and which only the federal government can remedy.

How long must Hawaii wait for that promised statehood, and a chance for the people to help themselves?

We, the voters of both parties, wonder who is big enough to measure up to the job of president in 1952. There will be numerous applicants for the job and all will assure us they fully measure up.

When it comes time, at age 65, for veterans of World Wars I and II to collect the pensions that are being anticipated, it will be the veterans and their children who will do a considerable portion of the paying. They will be a large percentage of the taxpayers of that day and will put up a large portion of the billions the pensions call for plus the cost of bureaucratic adminiaration. There will be a part of that cost in the price of everything they buy in addition to the direct federal taxes they pay.
